For there is nothing which takes place on earth more acceptable to that Supreme Deity who governs all this world, than those councils and assemblies of men, bound together by law, which are termed States; the governors and preservers of these go from hence, and hither do they return. . . . Therefore, Scipio, like your grandfather here, and me who begot you, cultivate justice and piety; which, while it should be great towards your parents and relations, should be greatest towards your country. Such a life is the path to Heaven and the assembly of those who have lived before, and who, having been released from their bodies, inhabit that place which thou beholdest.—CICERO'S VISION OF SCIPIO.

THE FALL OF REYNOLDS.

BUFORD, with four thousand cavalry, met the advance of the enemy on the Chambersburg Pike, on the morning of the 1st of July, 1863. REYNOLDS, who was in command of the right wing of the Union Army, consisting of the First, Eleventh, and Third Corps, came up to the support of BUFORD, at ten o'clock, A. M., with two brigades of Infantry of the First Division (WADSWORTH'S) of the First Corps, and immediately proceeded to post one of these (CUTLER'S) across the old railroad bed to the north of the pike, and returning to the left rode towards the other, the Iron Brigade, (MEREDITH'S,) which DOUBLEDAY, who had command of the First Corps, was leading into action in a triangular piece of wood skirting Willoughby Run, where ARCHER'S rebel brigade, which had just crossed the run, was advancing in line of battle. At the moment when three regiments of this (Iron) brigade, led by the Second Wisconsin, (FAIRCHILD'S,) had entered the wood and were becoming desperately engaged, REYNOLDS, accompanied by his staff, rode into the neck of the wood in the rear of these rapidly advancing troops, to examine the ground and the dispositions of the enemy, when he discovered a portion of the hostile line still advancing, and sweeping up on his left. Immediately turning to look for his supports, he received a ball in the back of the neck, from the direction in which he had seen the enemy, which entered the base of the brain, passing upward. For a few seconds he sat quite still in his saddle, and his horse, a powerful black, carried him back towards the open field, where, swaying to and fro, he fell to the ground in a group of massive oaks, just at the opening. VEIL, his devoted orderly, sprang from his horse, and raising the General's head, held it tenderly in his lap. But the General never spoke, and soon after expired. So calm and peaceful were his features that it was hard to believe that he was dead, a slight bruise upon his cheek, which he had received in falling, being the only visible mark of injury. In a rudely constructed litter his body was borne back to a little farm house just outside the village, on the Emmettsburg Pike, and at evening was removed to the tent of the General-in-Chief. Late at night it was sent, with a suitable escort, to Baltimore, where it was embalmed, and thence via Philadelphia to Lancaster, where, on the Fourth of July, with the simplest service, it was buried in the family grave.

One Hundred and Nineteenth Regiment.

NEAR the close of July, 1862, Peter C. Ellmaker, of Philadelphia, who had organized in the Spring of 1861, a regiment for home duty, known as the Gray Reserves, and which he commanded, received authority from Governor Curtin to raise a regiment for three years' service. Recruiting commenced on the 5th of August, and on the 31st, before the organization had been perfected, it was ordered to Washington. It proceeded thither on the following day, eight hundred strong, and was assigned temporarily to duty at the Arsenal. It was here joined by a company of one hundred and thirty men, recruited by Captain John B. Adams, and the organization was completed with the following field officers: Peter C. Ellmaker, Colonel; Gideon Clark, Lieutenant Colonel; Charles C. Knight, Major. On the 19th of September, two days after the battle of Antietam, it was ordered to fatigue duty on the northern defences of the Capital, and was employed in the construction of forts Mansfield and Reno. A month later it joined the Army of the Potomac, still in camp in the neighborhood of the Antietam battle-field, and was assigned to the First Brigade,* Second Division, Sixth Corps. Though suddenly thrown among veterans of two campaigns, it was prepared, by its thorough training, to hold its place with credit. After crossing the Potomac, it moved with the Corps to Acquia Creek, thence to White Oak Church, and on the 11th of December started on the Fredericksburg campaign. Moving up to the river bank near the lower crossing, it remained in position, awaiting the laying of the pontoons, until the following day, when it crossed, and was posted on the left of the corps, along the Bowling Green Road. The battle opened on the 13th, and the regiment was exposed to a heavy fire of artillery, under which it manfully maintained its ground, though for the first time under fire. Skirmishing was renewed on the following day, but there was little more determined fighting on that part of the line, and on the night of the 15th, it re-crossed the river, returning to its former camp on the 19th. The loss was five wounded, among whom was Major Knight. On the 20th of January, 1863, the regiment moved on Burnside's second campaign, marching up to Banks' Ford. But before any troops had crossed the river, the movement was cut short by impassable roads, and the columns, with great labor and suffering, returned to camp.

Upon the organization of the "Light Division," the One Hundred and Nineteenth, and Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, were assigned to the Third Brigade of the First Division, where they were associated with the Thirty-third New York, and Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania, and were under command of General David A. Russell, General Brooks being in command of the division, and General Sedgwick of the corps. On the 28th of April, the brigade again moved to the Rappahannock, at the lower crossing, and under cover of darkness, passed the stream in pontoon boats, captured and drove the enemy's pickets, effecting a permanent lodgment on the right bank. On the following morning it moved forward in line of battle, three-quarters of a mile, engaging the enemy's pickets, and taking his rifle-pits. In this position it remained until the 3d of May, when his intrenched position on Marye's Heights was carried by assault, and his works were occupied. The corps was immediately put in motion in pursuit of the flying foe. The One Hundred and Nineteenth, and the Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania, were detached from the brigade, and moved upon the plank road towards Chancellorsville. At Salem Church, midway, they came upon the enemy posted in a wood, concealed from view, and were at once heavily engaged at close quarters with his infantry. They were posted on the left of the road, and with other troops, were under the immediate command of General Sedgwick. With great gallantry they held their position, sustaining grievous loss. Sedgwick, finding himself confronted by vastly superior numbers, and likely to be overpowered, retired on the following day by Banks' Ford. Out of four hundred and thirty-two present for duty, the regiment had twelve killed, and one hundred and twelve wounded. Captain Peter Rogers was among the killed, and Captains Charles P. Warner and Andrew T. Goodman, and Lieutenant John M. Cook, among the wounded.

Upon the disbandment of the "Light Division," soon after the battle, the Fifth Wisconsin, and Sixth Maine, were assigned to the Third Brigade. Returning to its former camp, it remained until the 7th of June, when a detachment of two hundred and sixty men, under Major Henry P. Truefitt, who had succeeded Major Knight, with details from other regiments, was ordered to Hartwood Church, whence, under command of General Russell, it moved, and crossing the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, pushed forward to the support of the cavalry, hotly engaged at Beverly Ford. Returning at sunset, it proceeded to Bealton Station, remaining until the 14th, when it started to rejoin the rest of the regiment, already on the march for the Pennsylvania campaign, coming up with it at Fairfax Station. At Fairfax Court House, the regiment went into camp, and remained a week. The march was then resumed, arriving at Manchester, Maryland, on the evening of July 1st. From this point, the corps was summoned in haste to Gettysburg, and at nine o'clock commenced the march. It was continued without interruption until four P. M., of the following day, when it arrived upon the field, and the brigade remained massed in rear of the Fifth Corps during the night. On the morning of the 3d, it was moved to the extreme left of the line, in rear of Round Top, to meet any flank movement from that direction, but did not become engaged, the enemy making no determined demonstration on that part of the field. On the 4th, it moved to the summit of Little Round Top, where it remained during the day. On the 5th, it took the advance in pursuit of the retreating enemy, striking his rear near Fairfield, where a slight skirmish ensued. Direct pursuit was here abandoned, and the column moved to the left, following down the south side of the mountain, and crossing it with the trains, attended with great hardship and suffering, came up with the enemy in the neighborhood of Hagerstown, at once engaging his skirmishers; but on the night of the 14th, he made good his escape. The two armies now moved down over the old Virginia battle-grounds, the regiment reaching Warrenton on the 26th, where it remained for several weeks. This time was given to drill and discipline, which was studiously employed. While here, two hundred and five substitutes were received. On the 5th of October, the regiment relieved the pickets of the Second Corps at the fords of the Rapidan. Soon afterwards the rebel leader initiated a movement upon the right flank of the Union army, compelling it to fall back rapidly to Centreville. Defeated in his purpose, he in turn began to retreat. At Rappahannock Station he was found, on the 7th of November, in an entrenched position, covering his pontoon bridge. At his earnest solicitation, General Russell, in command of the division, was directed to storm the works. His own brigade, now led by Colonel Ellmaker, Lieutenant Colonel Clark commanding the regiment, was selected to lead the charge. With the Fifth Wisconsin and Sixth Maine deployed as skirmishers, supported by the One Hundred and Nineteenth and Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, aided by Upton's Brigade, it went forward in the face of a fierce fire of infantry and artillery, carried the works at the point of the bayonet, and captured the entire force, with artillery, battle-flags, and small arms. In his congratulatory order, General Meade says: "The commanding General congratulates the army upon the recent successful passage of the Rappahannock, in the face of the enemy, compelling him to withdraw to his intrenchments behind the Rapidan. To Major General Sedgwick, and the officers of the Sixth Corps, participating in the attack, particularly to the storming party under Brigadier General Russell, his thanks are due, for the gallantry displayed in the assault on the enemy's intrenched position of Rappahannock Station, resulting in the capture of four guns, two thousand small arms, eight battle-flags, one bridge train, and one thousand six hundred prisoners."* In this fierce struggle the regiment lost seven killed, and forty-three wounded. Captain Cyrus M. Hodgson, and Lieutenants Edward Everett Coxe and Robert Reaney, were among the killed.

Crossing the Rappahannock, the pursuit was continued to the Rapidan, the regiment encamping near Brandy Station. On the 26th, it joined in the Mine Run campaign, the brigade being under Colonel Ellmaker, and the regiment under Lieutenant Colonel Clark. On the 28th, the pickets of the regiment engaged the enemy in front of his strong works behind Mine Run. Upon the abandonment of operations, it returned to its former camping ground near Wellford's Ford, on the Hazel River, where it went into winter-quarters. On the 12th of January, 1864, Colonel Ellmaker resigned, and was honorably discharged, the command devolving on Lieutenant Colonel Clark. With the exception of a movement to Robertson's River, made on the 28th of February, 1864, in support of cavalry, the regiment remained quietly in quarters until the opening of the spring campaign under General Grant.

Moving shortly after daylight on the 4th of May, the brigade crossed the Rapidan at Germania Ford, and at noon on the following day, became hotly engaged in the thickets of the Wilderness. With the Fifth Wisconsin on its right, and the Forty-ninth Pennsylvania on its left, the regiment battled manfully, the enemy disputing the ground with desperate valor. The fighting ceased at night-fall, the regiment having lost seven killed and sixty-three wounded, Lieutenant George G. Lovett, mortally. Four color-bearers were either killed or wounded. Early on the following morning, the advance was ordered, and the fighting continued at intervals throughout the day. At night-fall, after the noise of battle had died out, and the two armies, apparently utterly exhausted, had sunk down to rest, the enemy massed his troops and struck heavily upon the extreme right of the line, held by the Sixth Corps, crushing it in and making some captures, among them the hospitals and wounded. This sudden onset was, however, soon checked and the lines re-possessed. On the 7th, the corps moved by flank via Chancellorsville, to the vicinity of Spottsylvania Court House, where the enemy was again found. On the 9th, General Sedgwick, while examining the ground, was killed by a rebel sharp-shooter. General Wright succeeded him, General Russell taking command of the division, and General Eustis of the brigade. On the 10th, the fighting was very severe. At 4 P. M., a charging column was formed, under cover of a wood, in three lines, the Fifth Maine, Ninety-sixth Pennsylvania, and One Hundred and Twenty-first New York, in the first, the Fifth Wisconsin, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania, and Sixth Maine in the second, and the One Hundred and Nineteenth Pennsylvania, Seventy-seventh, and Forty-third New York, in the third, all under command of Colonel Upton, the whole supported by the Vermont Brigade. Clearing the woods, it went gallantly forward, and when arrived upon the open ground, in front of the enemy's works, was saluted by a torrent of deadly missiles from front and flanks. Nothing daunted by this terrible death storm, it swept on and over his first line, capturing nine hundred prisoners. Rushing bravely on to his second line, the colors of the One Hundred and Nineteenth were borne boldly up, and planted on his works; but here the color-bearer was shot down, and the storming party failing of support on the left, was exposed to a severe enfilading fire, before which the bravest could not stand, and it was obliged to fall back, losing its dearly bought advantage, and suffering fearfully while retiring. Lieutenant Edward Ford, Jr., was among the killed. At seven o'clock on the 12th, it again went into action in front of a salient in the enemy's works, captured at daylight by the Second Corps, and until night-fall was unceasingly engaged, expending two hundred rounds of ammunition per man. Major Henry P. Truefitt was killed early in the engagement, and almost immediately thereafter, Captain Charles R. Warner, who succeeded him in command, was also killed. The scene of this struggle was known as the "Bloody Angle," or the "Slaughter Pen." In the series of engagements up to this time, commencing on the 5th of May, out of an aggregate for duty of four hundred, the regiment had lost two hundred and fifteen.

On the 18th, Lieutenant Colonel Clark resumed command, the regiment having been led since the fall of Warner, by Captains Gray and Landell. At noon of the 1st of June, the command reached Cold Harbor, and at five P. M., attacked in column by battalion, developing the position of the enemy in heavy earth-works. At dawn of the 3d, the attack was renewed, advancing by parallels, and in the operations of the day, Lieutenant George C. Humes, acting Adjutant, was among the killled. Until the 12th of June the command remained on the front line, within one hundred and fifty yards of the enemy's works, constantly under fire. On that day, General Eustis was relieved, and Colonel Clark succeeded him, Major Gray assuming command of the regiment, the latter officers having had temporary command on the 1st, and during the fierce fighting which succeeded. Moving again to the left, the command reached the James River on the 16th, and embarking upon transports, proceeded to Bermuda Hundred, whence it marched out to Butler's intrenchments. On the 19th, it crossed the Appomattox, and moving up to the Petersburg front, went into position along the bank of that stream, on the extreme right of the army. On the 29th, it proceeded to Ream's Station, on the Weldon Railroad, to the relief of the cavalry under Wilson, and joined in tearing up the road and intrenching the position, returning on the 2d of July. A few days later, four additional regiments were assigned to the brigade, Colonel Oliver Edwards, of the Thirty-seventh Massachusetts, succeeding to the command.

The threatening attitude assumed by the enemy under General Early, who had entered Maryland, and was pushing down, unchecked, towards the National Capital, rendered it necessary that troops should be sent to its relief. The Sixth Corps was accordingly dispatched. Early was driven, and beat a hasty retreat to the Shenandoah Valley. For more than two months the troops were kept upon the march, under a burning sun, between the Valley and Washington, without gaining any apparent advantage. In the meantime, the veterans and recruits of the Twenty-third Pennsylvania, had been added to the regiment, and General Sheridan had assumed command of the army. At three A. M., on the morning of the 19th of September, the regiment moved from camp, crossed the Opequan, and engaged the enemy in the battle of Winchester. At a little before mid-day, the line having been formed, it advanced to the attack, driving the entire rebel force for half a mile, when it was temporarily checked, the enemy making a most determined stand. At four P. M., the lines being re-formed and strengthened, and Sheridan leading, it again went forward; and now, nothing could withstand the fiery zeal of the troops, the enemy being driven in utter rout, the victory the most complete and gratifying in which the One Hundred and Nineteenth had ever had a share. In this engagement General Russell was killed.

On the 20th, the brigade was detached from the division, and ordered to garrison duty in the town of Winchester, where it remained until November, when it re-joined the corps, now reposing, after having again beaten and utterly routed the rebel army. The veterans of the Twenty-third, which had been assigned to this regiment, were here transferred to the Eighty-second. On the 30th of November, the corps having been ordered to return to the Petersburg front, the brigade moved by rail to Washington, and thence by transport to City Point, arriving in the vicinity of Yellow House, on the 5th of December, and relieving a brigade of the Fifth Corps.

Early in February, 1865, the brigade, now under command of General Hamlin, moved to the support of the Fifth Corps, engaged near Dabney's Mills, but returned without coming to battle. During the winter, the command was severely taxed in furnishing details for fatigue duty, in the construction of earth-works and enclosed fortifications. Upon the surprise and capture of Fort Steadman, on the 25th of March, the division was ordered to the support of the Ninth Corps; but before it could arrive on the ground, the fort had been re-taken. On the same day, the regiment participated in a sharp picket skirmish, brought on by an attempt to advance and straighten the lines. At two o'clock on the morning of the 2d of April, the regiment took its position in line, preparatory to storming the enemy's works. At four, the signal for the advance was given, and under a fierce fire from front and flank, his intrenched line was carried at all points, the One Hundred and Nineteenth, unaided, dislodging him from a formidable interior work, capturing many prisoners, with artillery, small arms, and stands of colors. In this desperate encounter, Colonel Clark, Lieutenant George W. Shriver, and Adjutant John D. Mercer, were severely wounded, the latter mortally, the command devolving on Lieutenant Colonel Gray. During the night of the 3d, the enemy evacuated Petersburg, and at the dawn of the 4th, the pursuit was commenced. On the afternoon of the 6th, the corps came up with him, strongly posted on Sailor's Creek. Fording the stream, here waist deep, a resolute charge was made, in which the One Hundred and Nineteenth gallantly participated, by which he was routed and his demoralized troops captured in mass. For three days longer the march was continued, when, at Appomattox Court House on the 9th, the rebel leader surrendered his entire army. Returning to Burkesville Station, the regiment remained in camp until the 17th, when, with the corps, it made a forced march to Danville, on the North Carolina border. After the surrender of Johnston, the command returned to the neighborhood of Washington, and on the 6th of June proceeded to Philadelphia, where, on the 19th, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment.

THIS regiment, chiefly recruited in the city of Philadelphia, and in the county of Venango, was organized at camp of rendezvous, near Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, early in September, 1862, with the following field officers: Chapman Biddle, of Philadelphia, Colonel; Elisha W. Davis, of Venango County, Lieutenant Colonel; Alexander Biddle, of Philadelphia, Major. Soon after its organization, it was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival, went into camp at Arlington Heights. Arms and equipments were not delivered until some weeks after its arrival, but drill and instruction were immediately commenced, and prosecuted with vigor, the regiment becoming noted for good discipline at the drills and reviews of General Casey's Provisional Brigade, to which it was then attached.

On the 1st of October, the regiment moved to Frederick, Maryland, and a week later joined General Meade's Division of Pennsylvania troops, above Sharpsburg, and near the battle ground of Antietam. With the exception of slight skirmishing, as the army moved south through Virginia, it had no experience in fighting until it entered upon the Fredericksburg campaign. After reaching Warrenton, where M'Clellan retired from, and Burnside assumed the command of the army, it passed through Fayetteville, Stafford Court House, Brooks' Station, and White Oak Church, encamping a short time at each place. On the 12th of December, it crossed the Rappahannock at Franklin's Crossing, below Fredericksburg, and moved to a position near Deep Run, where it bivouacked for the night in line of battle, the enemy being in front. On the morning of the 13th, moving forward over the broken ground near the Run, it crossed the Bowling Green Road, and took position opposite a wooded hill on which the enemy lay in well provided breast-works. This movement was made under a fire of artillery from the left flank, which was kept up for more than an hour, by which the line was twice struck, and ten men disabled. It was at the same time exposed to a direct fire from the front, which was answered by Ransom's guns in the immediate front of the regiment. A rebel caisson was at this juncture fortunately exploded, when, taking advantage of the favorable moment, the order was given to advance, and the division crossed the plain, four hundred yards wide, under fire from front and both flanks, drove the rebel skirmishers from a deep ditch which skirted the woods, ascended the slope of the hill, and broke the line of the enemy, which was distinctly marked by his dead. The line of battle of the division having been somewhat disordered by the inequalities of the ground over which it had passed, and the obstructions met, it was here partially re-formed, and the position held without further orders, under a hot fire from all directions. The impression prevailing that the troops were surrounded, the fire of the enemy coming from flanks and rear, in the absence of orders from either brigade or division chiefs, the troops retired to put themselves in communication with them; but finding that they were entirely unsupported, they took up a position facing the woods, still under fire, from which they were finally ordered to retire to the position occupied in the early morning. During Sunday, the 14th, and Monday, the 15th, the position was retained, in the hope that the enemy might be tempted from his fastnesses on the wooded heights, to the open fields below; but finding no indications of a hostile movement on his part, the army was withdrawn, and the regiment retired to camping ground near White Oak Church. A few weeks later it moved to Belle Plain, where it remained in huts and under canvas during the winter, performing the usual routine of picket duty and drill. The loss in the campaign was one hundred and eighty, chiefly sustained in the action at Fredericksburg, including two officers killed, Lieutenants George W. Brickley and M. W. C. Barclay, fo r lost to the service by wounds, and one from sickness.

Burnside's second campaign, which was entered upon on the 20th of January, 1863, was cut short by impassable roads. The artillery could not be moved, and after four days of exposure to the chilling weather, the army returned to its encampments. In returning, the regiment was left behind to assist in extricating the artillery, and afterwards to explore its way through an unknown country back to camp. This and another fruitless expedition to Port Conway, which the rebels, from the southern shore of the Rappahannock, were suspected of visiting, were the only variations from the usual routine of camp duty experienced during the winter.

The spring campaign opened with the march of the army to Chancellorsville. The First and Fifth corps were at first moved to Franklin's Crossing, of the Rappahannock, where they remained in support of the Sixth Corps, which made the passage of the stream, while Hooker, with the remaining three corps, marched and crossed several miles above. After remaining here until the 30th, the Third Corps, and on the 2d of May the First Corps, also moved above, and crossing, re-joined the army at Chancellorsville. After the reverse of the Eleventh Corps, on the evening of the 2d of May, the First Corps was hurried away from the extreme left, where it had halted on its way to the front, to the right, to meet a triumphant foe. The regiment, although much worn by fatiguing duty, suffered but slight loss. When the army withdrew to the neighborhood of Falmouth, after the battle, the regiment was stationed near the banks of the Rappahannock, three miles in advance of its former camping ground.

On the 12th of June the Gettysburg campaign opened, the regiment moving by steady, rapid marches to Centreville, which it reached on the 16th, thence to Broad Run, crossed the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, passing through Middletown, and arriving at Emmettsburg on the 29th. On the night of the 30th, the regiment formed the advance picket of the Third Division, Doubleday's, at a point about seven miles from Gettysburg, covering the ground from Marsh Creek to Middle Creek, the centre of the line being near the Cross Roads at Ross White's house. On the morning of the 1st of July, the regiment marched at the head of the brigade, composed of the One Hundred and Twenty-first, One Hundred and Fifty-first, and One Hundred and Forty-second Pennsylvania regiments, the Twentieth New York Regiment, and a battery of artillery, all under command of Colonel Biddle, Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Biddle being in command of the regiment. As the brigade approached Gettysburg, the noise of artillery was heard, and shells were seen bursting over some distant woods. Crossing the hills to the west of the town, it came upon Buford's Cavalry, which was engaging the enemy, and formed in a field facing to the westward, with a wood in front held by the enemy. Soon afterwards it moved to the north, and united with the left of the First Division, under General Wadsworth, arriving in time to meet an advance of the enemy through the woods to the west of the Theological Seminary. The position thus occupied, was held during most of the day, though frequently changing front as the enemy manifested a disposition to advance from the north or from the west. With his numerous batteries, the enemy kept up a vigorous shelling of the position, until he made his final assault at half past two in the afternoon, advancing from the north and the west in overpowering force. To meet his attack from the west, a change of front was made, which brought the One Hundred and Twenty-first on the extreme left of the line, having upon its right the Twentieth New York, then a battery, and upon the extreme right, the One Hundred and Forty-second. The One Hundred and Fifty-first Pennsylvania having been previously detached to support the Second Brigade, commanded by General Roy Stone, was posted near the pike, farther to the right, and just in rear of the Seminary, but was subsequently brought up and formed on the right of the One Hundred and Forty-second. The enemy's line of battle extended far beyond the extreme left of the Union line, lapping around it, his fire completely enfilading the One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment. When the direct assault on the front of the brigade came, it was at first successfully resisted. His line was received with an effective fire, and wounded men of the brigade, who were left upon the field, afterwards reported that none but scattered troops ever passed over the position; but his forces swarming in upon the left, and completely outflanking the brigade, gave no chance for successful resistance. The ground was, however, held until the brigade battery was withdrawn in safety, when the fragment of the command remaining, retired to a barricade in the woods, to the rear of the Seminary. Clinging to this until a large portion of the troops engaged, and the artillery and ambulances had passed on through the town, the brigade withdrew to Cemetery Hill, and re-formed in rear of its crest. Receiving a fresh supply of cartridges, the regiment was held in readiness to repel an anticipated assault from General Ewell, who had come in from the north; but no assault came, the rebel troops seeming content with their successes, and the men bivouacked at night, feeling that though beaten and driven back from their position of the morning, they had successfully checked the enemy, in vastly superior numbers, until a new position could be taken, immeasurably better than the first, and until the army could come up in sufficient strength to successfully cope with its adversary. A beautiful rainbow seen in the west seemed to promise better fortune for the morrow. Out of seven officers and two hundred and fifty-six men who entered the engagement in the morning, there were left at night but two officers and eighty-two men, an aggregate of one hundred and seventy-nine, either killed, wounded, or missing, upwards of sixty-five per cent.

On the following day, the brigade occupied a position on the Taneytown

Road, to the left of the Cemetery, and during the cannonade in the afternoon, was much exposed, the enemy's shells, from opposite directions, frequently bursting in the same field. Early on the morning of the 3d, it was moved into line of battle on the left centre, the regiment occupying a position immediately in front of General Doubleday's headquarters. A barricade of rails was thrown up for its protection, in case it should be pressed by infantry; but in the fierce cannonade by the enemy in the afternoon, which preceded his last grand charge, this barricade was shattered, and levelled with the dust. The men slept on their arms during the succeeding night, and on the two following days were employed in clearing the field, and in burying the dead. On the afternoon of the 5th, the enemy being in full retreat, it moved with the corps by the Emmettsburg Road, and crossing the mountains opposite Hagerstown, came up with the enemy, in position near Williamsport. His skirmishers were speedily driven in. Pausing before his intrenched line, until the forces could be brought into position, an advance was ordered; but the enemy had made good his escape across the Potomac, and his intrenchments were possessed with but the feeble opposition of a line of skirmishers.

Returning over the South Mountains to Berlin, the regiment crossed the Potomac, followed substantially the route of the previous year to Warrenton and Rappahannock Station, and thence, after the lapse of some weeks, through Brandy Station, and Culpepper, to a point near Raccoon Ford on the Rapidan, where it remained until Lee attempted to turn the right of the Union army, causing a retrograde movement. The regiment then moved via Paoli Mills to Kelly's Ford, where it was engaged in throwing up rifle-pits, and guarding the crossing, until it was ascertained that the rebel army had passed the stream above, when it marched at midnight, passing Warrenton Junction, Catlett's and Bristoe Stations, and arrived with the division up on the Centreville Heights, in time to prevent their occupation by Lee's advance, which had arrived in close proximity. As the rest of the army came up, the division moved out towards the Chantilly battle ground, and upon the abandonment of offensive operations by the enemy, and his consequent retirement, advanced again towards Haymarket and Thoroughfare Gap. At Haymarket, a force of of the enemy, supposed to be Stuart's Cavalry, dismounted, attacked at night, and in the conflict the regiment received a volley in the darkness, but fortunately without loss.

As the enemy continued to fall back, Meade advanced. At Catlett's Station, the One Hundred and Twenty-first was detailed for special duty in defending the Cedar Run Bridge, and in guarding the depots of stock, provision, and hospital stores deposited there, which duty it continued to perform until the close of the Mine Run campaign, when the army retired to winter-quarters on the left bank of the Rapidan. The regiment was then ordered to Paoli Mills, and subsequently to Culpepper, where it went into camp, and finally to permanent quarters.

During the winter, the First Corps, which, since its great sacrifices at Gettysburg, had been composed of little more than skeleton regiments, was broken up, and distributed to other corps. By this change, the One Hundred and Twenty-first became part of the Fifth Corps, and though increased in numbers by the addition of a full company, which had been on duty at headquarters, was never after able to bring more than two hundred men into the field, no facilities having been afforded for recruiting. Colonel Chapman Biddle was honorably discharged on the 10th of December, 1863, and Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Biddle, on the 9th of January, 1864. Thereupon, Thomas M. Hall, who had been promoted to Major, in December, 1863, was made Lieutenant Colonel. During the winter the regiment remained in camp a short distance from Culpepper, engaged in the usual routine of camp and picket duty.

At one o'clock on the morning of the 4th of May, the regiment moved on the Wilderness campaign. On the following morning, having crossed the Rapidan at Germania Ford, it moved forward, and as it became evident that the enemy was in front, took position in a dense thicket, through which it was compelled to cut alleys before it could advance. At noon it came upon the foe, and became hotly engaged, holding its ground by hard fighting until four P. M., when it was obliged to retire, after having lost heavily in killed and wounded, and was moved to the left to the support of the Second Corps. Early on the morning of the 6th, in conjunction with the Second Corps, which was formed in three lines of battle, it moved forward under a galling fire from the enemy in front, and a raking flank fire from his batteries. The ground was fiercely contested, and the command was finally checked and forced to fall back. But renewing the attack, it soon regained the lost ground. The enemy was here heavily reinforced, and succeeded in pushing the Union column back to the Gordonsville Road, where temporary works had been hastily thrown up. Artillery could not be used on account of the nature of the ground, and the three lines with which the advance was made had been gradually moulded into one. At the Gordonsville Road, the brigade to which the One Hundred and Twenty-first was attached, was posted in rear of, and supporting a portion of the Second Corps. Late in the afternoon the enemy, with a recklessness rarely witnessed, charged upon the works, and in face of the deadly volleys of the infantry, and the more terrible fire of the artillery, succeeded in carrying a part of the line on the left, and in planting two of his standards upon the defences. At this juncture the brigade, with the One Hundred and Twenty-first on the extreme right, which until this moment had been lying prostrate upon the ground a few yards in the rear, was ordered to advance, and springing forward, came down upon the victorious enemy with a steady and unflinching front, pouring upon him volley after volley, wrenching from him his dear bought advantage, and driving him in confusion to the woods beyond. With the exception of slight skirmishing, this ended the fighting for the day. After refilling the cartridge boxes, the men rested during the night in the works, and on the morning of the 7th were led to the rear, where they remained until night-fall, and then commenced the march towards Spottsylvania Court House, the enemy in the Wilderness having taken to his works. All night long the march was continued, reaching Laurel Hill, on the morning of the 8th, relieving a portion of the First Division, of the Fifth Corps, which was engaging the enemy under a heavy cross-fire from batteries in position on an eminence to its left. Finding him too strongly posted to be driven out with the force at hand, the ground was held, and temporary works were thrown up. During the following day the command was occupied in keeping the enemy at bay, being subjected the while to an annoying fire from two of his pieces. On the 10th the command advanced, and engaged him in front of the works until late in the afternoon, when bayonets were fixed, and all preparations made for a charge. But before the advance was made, the order was countermanded, and during the 11th it lay in the works. At night a second line in rear of the first was thrown up, and on the 12th the command again advanced in column, under a heavy cross-fire of artillery; but after a fierce struggle, in which many of the bravest fell, it was compelled to retire. In the action of the 10th, Captain William W. Dorr, in command of the regiment, was among the killed, At evening it was taken to the left, where it relieved a portion of the Sixth Corps, and lay during the night in line of battle.

On the morning of the 13th it returned to its former position, and towards mid-day resumed the march towards Spottsylvania Court House, getting into position on the enemy's front at daylight of the following morning. On the 18th it again advanced and threw up a line of works, which it occupied under continual artillery fire, with occasional sharp skirmishing, until the 21st. On that day it moved on to Guinea Station, where the regiment was deployed as skirmishers, and advanced two miles, capturing a number of prisoners, and routing a rebel battery. On the 23d the command again met the enemy in force at Jericho Ford, and immediately engaged him, and with the assistance of the artillery, forced him to withdraw. In this affair the conduct of the brigade was warmly complimented by General Cutler, then in command of the division. On the 25th a movement was made to the left, and the regiment was thrown forward as skirmishers, acting as such during the entire day, and losing ten in killed and wounded. Lieutenant and Adjutant John Iungerich was here mortally wounded, expiring a month later. On the 28th, the Pamunky River was crossed, a little in advance of the enemy, when works for the defence of the position were hastily thrown up, and on the 30th the command took position on the right of the Pennsylvania Reserves, which were hotly engaged. On the 1st of June the regiment advanced on the Mechanicsville Road, near Bethesda Church, under a raking fire of artillery, suffering considerable loss, but driving the rebel skirmishers, and throwing up breast-works in the edge of the woods from which they retreated. After dark a further advance was made through the woods, and to within a stone's throw of the rebel pickets, where entrenching was quietly but diligently prosecuted, and the morning light disclosed to the astonished rebels a strong line of works under their very noses. Their artillery was hurried away to safe positions, and for five days the brigade held the ground under a continuous fire of artillery and sharp-shooters.

On the 6th of June the brigade reached Cold Harbor, where it was transferred to the First Division, in command of General Chamberlain. Intrenching, skirmishing, and hard marching was kept up until the 14th, when it reached the James, and on the 16th crossed and took position in front of Petersburg. On the 18th it again advanced, and crossing the Norfolk Railroad, drove in the enemy's skirmishers, sustaining a heavy loss, but establishing a permanent line. This was held until the night of the 20th, when the troops were relieved by the Ninth Corps, and retired to the rear. On the night of the 21st the brigade advanced in line on the left, through a thick wood, and under the fire of the rebel skirmishers threw up a breast-work, and was here employed in constructing what was subsequently known as Fort Hell. As the location was particularly exposed, much care had to be exercised in the early stages of the work, to elude the attention of the enemy. The ort was finished and occupied by two batteries of heavy artillery before the springing of the mine, which occurred on the 31st of July, and sustained without damage, the heavy rebel fire which was then brought to bear upon it.

On the 18th of August the regiment moved with the corps for the destruction of the Weldon Railroad, and after crossing the Blackwater, was deployed as skirmishers, driving in the rebel skirmishers as it advanced. The road having been effectually destroyed for a long distance, the brigade retired to works thrown up along the line of the ruins. On the 21st the regiment occupied a position in line on the left, and about two hundred yards in rear of the extreme left of the Fourth Division, which was on that day hotly engaged. The enemy finally advanced in column, charging the works in front of the Fourth Division, and sweeping around its left, thinking to come in upon an unprotected rear, but suddenly encountered the brigade, prepared to receive them. Determined not to be foiled in their purpose, they fought obstinately for some time, returning the fire that was poured in upon them, with the utmost spirit and determination, and only when almost annihilated did their spirit forsake them. But few escaped, hundreds being killed and wounded; while many seeing no other alternative, threw down their arms and came pouring over the works, bringing in several stands of colors. After this short but decisive contest, the brigade moved farther to the left, and erected new works. On the 12th of September the regiment was transferred to the First Brigade of the Third Division, and five days later was transferred to the Third Brigade of this division. With this brigade, it marched on the 30th to Peeble's Farm, to the extreme right of the enemy's line, and, during the night succeeding, threw up a line of works on the crest of a hill. Early on the following morning the enemy, in great force, supported by artillery, made a furious attack. The works were held by the brigade until the line was broken to right and left of it, when, the enemy coming in upon both flanks, compelled it to give way, and nearly half of the regiment, including the Colonel and seven line officers, were captured. The morning report of the following day showed but four commissioned officers and eighty-five enlisted men present for duty.

During the succeeding winter the regiment remained in camp with the brigade, on the extreme left of the line, participating in but two movements of importance. The first was made on the 4th of December, by a force consisting of the Fifth Corps, one division of the Second, and a division of cavalry, all under command of General Warren, the purpose of which was to destroy the Weldon Railroad, as far south as possible. Striking the road twenty miles out from Petersburg, the work of destruction was continued, with little opposition, as far as Bellefield. The troops being without camp equipage, and exposed to a fearful storm of rain and hail, suffered severely. The second was entered upon on the 6th of February, 1865, and extended to Hatcher's Run. It resulted in severe fighting, without decisive results. Upon the occasion of the rebel attack on Fort Steadman, on the 25th of March, the regiment was put in motion with other troops, for the scene of conflict, but the assault was successful y repelled before it reached the ground, and immediately returned to its quarters. On the 31st of March it participated in the attack on the enemy's position at the Boydton Plank Road, and on the following day on his position at Five Forks, where he was completely routed, losing most of his artillery. The advantage here gained was rapidly followed up, and on the 9th the rebel army laid down its arms at Appomattox Court House. While the rebel troops were being paroled, the regiment performed guard duty in the town, with headquarters at the Court House. On the 12th it moved in charge of captured property, and proceeded with it to Burkesville Station, on the South Side Railroad, after which it was encamped for two weeks along this road. It then moved to Petersburg, thence to Richmond, and finally went into camp on Arlington Heights, opposite Washington, where on the 2d of June, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment.

In the month of July, 1862, Emlen Franklin, of the city of Lancaster, who had served as Captain in the First Regiment, received authority from Governor Curtin to recruit a regiment for nine months' service. Establishing a camp a mile and a half east of Lancaster, recruiting was actively prosecuted, and with remarkable rapidity fourteen companies were organized, and assembled at the rendezvous. On the 12th of August, ten of these were organized in a regiment, designated the One Hundred and Twenty-second, with the following field officers: Emlen Franklin, Colonel; Edward M'Govern, Lieutenant Colonel; Thaddeus Stevens, Jr., Major. The regiment was almost exclusively from Lancaster county, and with the exception of a few of the officers, its members had little knowledge of military duty. Company drill was promptly commenced, but before it had been carried very far, the regiment was ordered to Washington, the disasters of Pope's campaign rendering it necessary that all available forces should be gathered about the Capital. Upon its arrival, on the 16th of August, it was reported to General Casey, then in command of the defences of the city. After a few days' delay, it moved to Fairfax Court House, where it was assigned to General Piatt's Brigade, which subsequently became the Third,* of the Third Division, Third Corps. While in front of Washington, it was moved from point to point, occupying successively Fort Richardson, a position at Clouds Mills, at a point opposite Georgetown, and at Fairfax Seminary, spending little time at any one place.

Upon the return of the army into Virginia from the campaign in Maryland, the brigade joined it, and subsequently went into camp near Falmouth. On the 11th of December, Burnside, now in command of the army, put his columns in motion for an attack on the enemy holding the heights above Fredericksburg. Having forced a crossing of the river, he attacked on the 13th. Unsuccessful in his first assaults, he ordered Hooker, who had held a part of his corps in reserve, to advance towards evening to the relief of his thinned lines. One of Hooker's divisions was thrown in, and suffered severely. But the One Hundred and Twenty-second, occupying a position on the extreme right of the line, was not involved, and hence suffered no loss in the battle. On the night of the 15th it re-crossed the river, and returned again to camp. In

* Organization of the Third Brigade, General Don Piatt, Third Division, General A. W. Whipple, Third Corps, General Stoneman, subsequently General Sickles. Eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel Benjamin P. Bailey; One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel A. Van Horn Ellis; One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Emlen Franklin.

Burnside's second attempt to move, the regiment marched, endured the peltings of the storm as did the rest of the army, and when the project was abandoned, on account of the depth of the mud, returned again to camp.

The regiment moved with the corps under General Sickles, on the 28th of April, on the Chancellorsville campaign, and proceeding to a point below Fredericksburg, opposite Franklin's crossing of the Rappahannock in the Fredericksburg campaign, halted and remained until the morning of the 30th, when it moved rapidly up to United States Ford, and crossing, re-joined the main body under Hooker, near Chancellorsville. On the 1st of May, Sickles occupied a position upon the right centre of the line of battle, holding Whipple's Division in reserve, his front line throwing up a breast-work. On the evening of the 2d, Stonewall Jackson, who had succeeded in bringing his command across the front of the entire Union army, from left to right, massed it and charged with his characteristic impetuosity. The Eleventh Corps, which held the right, was broken and driven in. The tide of disaster swept on towards the centre; but when it reached Sickles, it was fortunately checked, Jackson was mortally wounded, and the rebel columns were stayed. During the night, Sickles re-formed his lines, bringing up the division of Whipple, and by a bold night attack pushed back the enemy and regained a part of the lost breast-works, posting his artillery so as to sweep the open ground about the Chancellor House.

At early dawn the battle opened in Sickles' front, with terrible earnestness, the rebels seeming determined to break through, and by unwonted daring to avenge the fall of their leader. "In the annals of this war," says an eye witness, "there has been no greater manifestation of desperation than that shown by the rebels this Sunday morning. They came through the woods in solid mass, receiving in their faces the terrible hail storm which burst like the fury of a tornado from Berry's and Birney's lines, from Whipple's and Williams', which were at once advanced to the front. The batteries—the forty pieces of artillery under Best—hurled in the grape and canister. The advancing column was cut up and gashed as if pierced, seamed, and ploughed by invincible lightning. Companies and regiments melted away, yet still they came. Berry and Birney advanced to meet them. They were terrible shocks. The living waves rolled against each other as you have seen the billows on a stormy sea. The enemy, as if maddened by the obstinacy of these handfuls of men, rushed up to the muzzles of the cannon, only to be swept back, leaving long lines of dead where the grape swept through. * * * But Sickles could not hold out against the tremendous odds. Gradually he was driven in." * A new line was taken in rear of the first, more contracted and more easily defensible, which was fortified, and against this the fury of the storm spent itself. The loss of the regiment in this desperate encounter, was one hundred and thirty-five in killed and wounded. General Whipple received a mortal wound, and died on the field. His remains were forwarded to Washington, and thither the regiment was ordered to proceed to act as escort at his funeral. At the conclusion of these sad rites, its term of service having now expired, it was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 15th and 16th days of May, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Twenty-third Regiment.

THE quota of Allegheny County under the call of the President, of July 1st, 1862, was fifteen companies. To encourage and hasten enlistments, a mass meeting was held on the 28th, on West Commons, Allegheny City, at which a vast concourse of people was assembled, estimated at not less than fifteen thousand, at which patriotic speeches were made by Governor Curtin, and leading citizens of the county. Resolutions were adopted calling on all loyal men to flock to the national standard, and providing for a subscription for a bounty of fifty dollars to each volunteer. The Rev. John B. Clark, at that time pastor of the Second United Presbyterian Church, in Allegheny, and a clergyman of nearly eleven years' standing, at the close of his services on Sabbath, the 5th of August, requested those of his congregation who were willing to enlist in the national armies, to meet him in the basement of the church on the following Monday evening. Many came, and in three days' time three companies were organized, of one of which, Mr. Clark was elected Captain. Drill was immediately commenced at the Allegheny Commons, and in a little time ten full companies had been recruited, and a regimental organization effected with the following field officers: John B. Clark, Colonel; Frederick Gast, Lieutenant Colonel; Hugh Danver, Major. Companies F and I were recruited at Tarentum, a village twenty miles up the Allegheny River. A small squad which entered company H, was from Greene county. The rest of the regiment was recruited in and about Pittsburg and Allegheny.

On the 29th of August the regiment, a thousand strong, proceeded to Harrisburg, arriving at Camp Curtin on the morning of the 21st, where it was armed and equipped, and on the evening of the same day started for Washington. Upon its arrival it crossed the Potomac, and went into camp at Camp Stanton. Drill was at once resumed, schools for the instruction of officers were established, and the command soon became proficient in duty, eliciting on parade the compliments of its superior officers by its fine soldierly bearing. It was assigned to the Second Brigade,* Third Division, Fifth Corps.

On the 29th of August, at the opening of the Second Bull Run battle, the regiment was moved out in the direction of Bailey's Cross Roads, and formed in picket line, with orders to suffer no person to pass through in either direction. For a day and a half this order was rigidly executed. But as the battle raged and increased in violence on the plains of Manassas, the Union army was borne back, and the broken and dispirited troops came pouring in, until they could be no longer held, the confused mass breaking through and moving on towards Washington, whither the division was soon afterwards ordered to follow. At the Capital, the regiment exchanged its arms, Austrian muskets, with which it had at first been supplied, for Springfield rifles.

*Organization of the Second Brigade, Colonel P. H. Allabach, Third Division, General A. A. Humphreys, Fifth Corps, General Fitz John Porter. One Hundred and Thirty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel P. H. Allabach; One Hundred and Thirty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel F. B. Speakman; One Hundred and Twenty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, John B. Clark; One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Edward J. Allen.

On the morning of the 14th of September, the command started on the march through Maryland, and arrived near Frederick at night-fall of the 16th. Here the division remained during the 17th, under orders to cover Frederick from the direction of Harper's Ferry. At sunset it received orders to move to Antietam, and at the moment of receiving the orders the sound of battle was heard for the first time that day. The command was again put upon the march, and for the entire night, up and down the rugged way, it was urged forward, and at a little after sunrise on the following morning, was halted on the Antietam battle-field, a short distance from Sharpsburg. A renewal of the battle was momentarily expected, and the men, though worn out by forced marches, stood ready for the onset. The ground was strewn with the unburied dead. Hour after hour it waited, but no sound of battle came. Finally, it having been ascertained that the enemy had withdrawn, the brigade was ordered to Shepherdstown Ford, where it was saluted by a few shots from the enemy's artillery, from the opposite shore, but suffered no loss. At night it retired a mile back from the river, where it went into bivouac, and while it remained in Maryland, was studiously drilled and disciplined.

With the army it crossed the Potomac, and marched up the Loudon Valley to Warrenton, where M'Clellan was relieved and Burnside put in command. From Warrenton the regiment marched to a point on Potomac Creek, four miles from Fredericksburg, where it went into camp and was engaged in drill and picket duty until the 12th of December, when it marched to the music of cannon towards Fredericksburg. On the following day the battle opened, and at three P. M., after the corps of Hancock and French had been checked and terribly slaughtered, Humphreys' Division was ordered in. It was a forlorn hope, but gallantly it went forward, and charged again and again those impregnable heights. What brave men dare do, they did; but it was all in vain. No human power could stand against the storm that swept that fatal ground. The One Hundred and Twenty-third occupied a position in the line, with its right reaching nearly to the pike, and bore manfully its part in the battle, suffering grievously. Lieutenant James R. Coulter was among the killed, and Captain Daniel Boisol and Lieutenant George Dilworth among the mortally wounded. The entire loss was twenty-one killed, and one hundred and thirty-one wounded. All night long it lay in position, and through the weary hours of the following day, exposed to a constant fire of the enemy's pickets, and until nine at night, when it was ordered to retire. On the night of the 15th, when the army re-crossed the river, the regiment was posted above the Court House, on the outskirts of the city, forming part of the rear guard, and just as daylight was breaking on the following morning, re-crossed the river and took up the line of march for its old camp ground.

In January, 1863, the regiment moved to a camp a mile nearer Falmouth, where it was employed in camp and picket duty. At the opening of the spring campaign under Hooker, the Fifth Corps, now under command of General

Meade, moved on the 28th of April, with the main body of the army for Chancellorsville. Immediately after its arrival on the 1st of May, the division marched out on the road leading towards Banks' Ford, passing on the way through the deserted camp of a Mississippi Brigade, the tents still standing. It had not gone far before an order was received to counter-march, and not ten minutes after its arrival at the Chancellor House, the corps was attacked, the brunt of the action falling on Sykes' Division of regulars. The brigade was hurried away to the extreme left, where it was at once put to fortifying. At evening of the 2d, heavy firing was heard away to the right, where the Eleventh Corps stood, and at midnight, Jackson having succeeded in breaking and driving in the right wing, a desperate struggle with infantry and artillery was made to push him back, and re-gain some of the lost ground. In anxious suspense the troops awaited the coming of morning, when the brigade was led at double-quick to the road leading from Chancellorsville to United States Ford, where most of the hard fighting of the 3d, the Sabbath, occurred. It was immediately posted in support of batteries, which position it occupied until the close of the battle. While here, seven men were wounded by the explosion of a single shell, and five were taken prisoners. All night of the 6th, while the army was re-crossing the river, the men of the One Hundred and Twenty-third toiled manfully, in the midst of a fearful rain, to move the artillery through deep mud to the crossing—the river at flood-tide—and afterwards occupied rifle-pits until nearly all had crossed. After two days spent in camp, its term of service having expired, the regiment was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 13th of May, it was mustered out. Returning to Pittsburg in a body, it met a flattering ovation, the people turning out en masse to receive it, and was finally disbanded.

One Hundred and Twenty Fourth Regiment.

SEVEN companies of the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth Regiment, A, C, E, F, G, I, and K, were recruited in Chester county, and three B, D, and H, in Delaware. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, near Harrisburg, but before an organization could be effected, they were ordered to Washington, and proceeded thither on the 12th of August, 1862, under command of the senior Captain, Joseph W. Hawley. Upon their arrival, they went into camp near Fort Albany, two miles south-east of the Capital, and on the 17th a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: Joseph W. Hawley, of Chester county, Colonel; Simon Litzenberg, of Delaware county. Lieutenant Colonel; I. Law. Haldeman, of Delaware county, Major.

On the 7th of September the regiment was ordered to Rockville, Maryland, where, upon its arrival, it was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Eleventh Corps. Having been but a little more than three weeks recruited, and most of this time having been given to change of camps requiring heavy details for fatigue duty, little attention had been given to drill, when, on the afternoon of the 9th, it was ordered upon the march to meet the enemy. Crossing South Mountain on the evening of the 15th, it followed up the retreating foe to the banks of the Antietam Creek, where he was found strongly posted. As the regiment moved rapidly in advance of the trains, rations in haversack soon became exhausted. Fresh beef was delivered during the evening of the 16th, but scarcely had it been received when the regiment was ordered into line, and moved rapidly to the support of General Hooker, in command of the right wing of the army. "It was ordered to the front," says Major Haldeman in his official report, "at seven A. M. On reaching the extreme edge of the woods on the east side of the corn-field, our line was formed and stationed in a position behind the fence. We were then ordered to advance, our right extending across the road, and beyond the grain-stacks. We were led in line into the corn-field about twenty paces, and ordered to halt, as we could not distinguish our own troops. We were then ordered to fall back to the edge of the corn-field, and take position again behind the fence, which was done in good order. We were again ordered to advance, when the right, after proceeding about one hundred yards, received a raking fire from the enemy in the woods, which was responded to by repeated volleys from our men; but the fire from our left, and from a battery of the enemy on the right, compelled us again to fall back to the stacks. A battery was now planted on the hill, between the wood and the corn-field, opposite the stacks, and the right wing of the regiment was ordered to its support. The left wing followed up the advance through the corn-field, making successful charges upon the enemy, until it was also ordered to the support of the batteries. The enemy's guns were silenced, and at three P. M., the regiment was ordered to the rear, where it was directed by General Hancock to remain in readiness to support batteries upon the right; but not being required, it bivouacked upon the field during the night." The loss in this engagement was fifty in killed and wounded. Lieutenant Isaac Finch received a mortal wound from which he died on the 20th of October. Colonel Hawley was among the wounded.

On the day following the battle, the regiment was employed in burying the dead, and on the 19th started for Pleasant Valley, reaching it on the 20th, after a severe march. It was subsequently posted on Maryland Heights, but again returned to its old camp at Pleasant Valley, where it was transferred to a brigade commanded by General Kane. On the 30th of October, Kane's Brigade was ordered to Loudon Heights. On the 8th of November a reconnoissance was made, up the valley, by a detachment of the regiment consisting of one hundred men, with two pieces of artillery, which returned at daylight on the following morning, bringing in abandoned stores of the enemy. In consequence of the alarm of the pickets on the mountain, on the night of the 16th, the regiment was ordered, with a portion of the brigade, to the support of a battery posted thereon, remaining until the 19th. The heavy guns which had been mounted on Maryland Heights, sufficiently commanding the position, the garrison was relieved and returned to camp. Whilst here, drill and discipline were studiously prosecuted. On the 10th of December, upon the eve of the movement upon Fredericksburg, the Twelfth Corps, which had been held in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, was ordered forward, and by forced marches over almost impassable roads and swollen streams, in the bleak wintry weather, arrived across the Occoquan on the 15th. The fighting at Fredericksburg being over, it was ordered to re-cross the Occoquan on the 17th, the regiment returning to Fairfax Station. On the 28th it was again put upon the march to meet Stuart's Cavalry, but failed to find it. On the 8th of January, the brigade made a reconnoissance to the vicinity of Wolf's Run Shoals, returning without encountering opposition. On the 19th the brigade again broke camp and crossing the Occoquan, joined with the army in Burnside's second campaign, and after toiling painfully through the mud and under drenching rains, the trains and artillery being moved only by the most vigorous efforts, it finally rested at Stafford Court House, the campaign having been abandoned.

On the 21st of March, the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth, which had been brigaded with it, were transferred to Geary's Division of the Twelfth Corps, General Kane being transferred with them, and taking command of the brigade to which they were assigned. At daylight of the 27th of April, the regiment, with eight days' rations, marched on the Chancellorsville campaign. Crossing the Rappahannock in rear of the Eleventh Corps, the Twelfth moved on to Germania Ford, where its progress was impeded by the troops in advance, and did not reach the Chancellor House until three P. M., of the 30th. Line of battle was immediately formed, the position of the regiment falling in the right wing of the corps. On the following morning, May 1st, the brigade advanced, and soon encountered the enemy's pickets, pushing them back into the woods beyond. Having attained a position considerably in advance of the main line, its safety was much endangered by a flank movement of the enemy, and it was withdrawn to the original position of the previous evening, where, during the night, it was busily employed in throwing up breast-works, being compelled for want of intrenching tools to use bayonets and tin plates. During the early part of the following day, the enemy shelled the line at intervals, and at three P. M., the brigade was again ordered to advance, the regiment moving along the Fredericksburg Plank Road, and forming line of battle in the woods, where the enemy, concealed from view, had fortified. Unable to move him from his position, the brigade fell back, and at five returned to the breast-works, reaching them just as the broken troops of the Eleventh Corps came pouring in from the extreme right. Geary's Division was at once faced under a heavy artillery fire of the enemy, to meet the threatened storm, and succeeded in holding its position until ten on the morning of the 3d, when the enemy, having outflanked it on the right, compelled it to fall back to a second line of defense which had been taken up, more contracted, and easily held. On the 6th the regiment re-crossed the river, and returned to its camp at Acquia. On the 9th, the term of service having expired, it was relieved from duty, and returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 16th, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Regiment.

In July, 1862, Jacob Higgins, a citizen of Blair county, who had served in the Mexican War, in the three months' service, and as Lieutenant Colonel of the first Pennsylvania Cavalry, until January preceding, received authority from Governor Curtin to recruit a regiment for nine months' service. The requisite number of companies were rapidly filled, and rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where a regimental organization was effected on the 16th of August, with the following field officers: Jacob Higgins, Colonel; Jacob Szink, Lieutenant Colonel; John J. Lawrence, Major. Companies A, B, D, E, G, and K, were recruited in Blair county, and C, F, H, and I, in Huntingdon county. A few of the officers had served in the Mexican war, and a large proportion of officers and men in the three months' service. Receiving arms and accoutrements, the regiment moved, on the evening of the day of its organization, for Washington, reporting upon its arrival to General Casey, by whom it was assigned to a provisional brigade, of which Colonel Higgins was placed in command. On the 18th, the regiment was ordered into Virginia, reporting to General Whipple, and was stationed, first at Hunter's Chapel, and subsequently at Fort Bernard, where it was engaged in drill, and in fatigue duty upon the fortifications. In addition to regular infantry drill, five selected companies were detailed for daily artillery drills at the forts. During the closing scenes of Pope's disastrous campaign, it was on duty here, and until the 6th of September, when it was ordered to re-cross the Potomac, and proceed to Rockville, where, upon its arrival, it was assigned to Crawford's Brigade, of Williams' Division, of Banks', subsequently Mansfield's Corps, composed of the Tenth Maine, Fifth Connecticut, Twenty-eighth New York, Forty-sixth, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth, and One Hundred and Twenty-eight Pennsylvania regiments.

The march was resumed on the 9th, and on the 16th the corps arrived on the banks of the Antietam Creek, the battle opening on the afternoon of that day. At eight o'clock in the evening, the corps was put in motion, the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth, which was at the head of the column, being ordered to follow the lead of General Mansfield in person. Moving by a circuitous route, he crossed the stream and led his column to the support of the troops which had been engaged. Early on the following morning, Colonel Higgins was ordered to take his regiment across an open field to a small belt of timber, and drive out the enemy concealed therein. Advancing under a heavy fire of shot and shell, the wood was cleared, and pushing forward the enemy was driven to the little white church, on the Sharpsburg Road. General Mansfield, while at the head of his men, was mortally wounded, and was succeeded by General Williams. Soon afterwards, the regiment * was ordered to advance into the woods, in which the church stood, and to hold the ground at all hazards. With heroic daring the regiment moved forward, and drove back the enemy, killing and capturing a number of his men. Being unsupported and in advance of the rest of the corps, it was finally forced to fall back before superior numbers moving upon its front and flank, and retired just in time to save itself from utter annihilation. The order to retire was reluctantly obeyed, the men being unaware of the movement upon their flank, and confident of their ability to hold their own against the foe on their front. It was soon after ordered to the assistance of a battery left without supports, and in imminent peril of capture. By its timely arrival the guns were saved, and repeated charges of the enemy to capture them and gain the position, were successfully repelled. When night at length put an end to the battle, the men sank upon the ground to rest, having displayed a heroism worthy of veterans. The slaughter in its ranks had been terrible. Five color-bearers were killed, and the flag was finally borne by Captain Wallace, of the color company. Lieutenant Colonel Szink was disabled by the explosion of a shell in the midst of the fight. Lieutenant Robert M. Johnston, Adjutant of the regiment, was mortally wounded, dying two days after. Captains C. R. Hostetter and William H. Simpson, and Lieutenants Wilbur F. Martin, Alexander W. Marshall, Peter S. Trees, William C. Wagoner, and George Thomas, were among the wounded. The total loss in the regiment was twenty-nine killed, one hundred and seventeen wounded—four mortally—and four missing.

After the battle, the regiment was posted at Maryland Heights, and in Pleasant Valley, until the 1st of November, when it crossed the Potomac and was stationed on the eastern slope of Louden Heights, having, in the meantime, been transferred to the Second Brigade of the First Division, and been well drilled by regiment and brigade, the officers attending a school of instruction under the charge of Major Mathews, of the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania. On the 10th of December, the Twelfth Corps, which had remained on duty in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry, after the advance of the rest of the army into Virginia, commenced the march to join the main body, now moving for the battle of Fredericksburg. Passing Leesburg, and Fairfax, the regiment arrived on the 16th within four miles of Dumfries, where it was halted—the battle of Fredericksburg having terminated disastrously—and counter-marched to Fairfax Station, where it was finally settled in comfortable quarters. On the 27th, the rebel cavalry under Stuart made its appearance at Dumfries, and the brigade, on the morning of the 28th, was put upon the march to meet it. At Wolf Run Shoals its advance guard was attacked, and a section of artillery was wheeled into position in an old rebel fortification, to await its coming. At evening, General Kane led the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth some six miles out, in advance of the brigade, to a cross-roads, where it was placed in ambush, awaiting the appearance of the rebel raiders. The night was intensely cold, and as it was necessary to preserve secrecy, fires were not allowed, the men undergoing intense suffering. The enemy failed to make his appearance, and finally escaped, and the regiment, on the following morning, returned to camp. On the 20th of January, 1863, the bugle again sounded for the march. The following extract from an officer's diary will illustrate the part borne by the regiment in the campaign which followed, familiarly known as the Mud March: "January 20th. Reached Dumfries the first night. January 21st. Rained all night. Left Dumfries early. Marched very slow. Bridge washed away. Halted to re-build it. January 22d. Rained all night. Left Shipping Point at noon, and marched three miles. Halted to build bridge across Acquia Creek. January 23d. Marched to Stafford Court House. January 24th. Visited by General Slocum, who complimented the brigade for its fortitude upon the march, and directed us to make ourselves comfortable in our present quarters." The campaign being now ended, time was here passed in drills and reviews, and in the performance of heavy guard and picket duty, the activity of the rebel cavalry in front occasioning frequent alarms and midnight marches.

* "The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth [fifth] Pennsylvania Volunteers were pushed across the turnpike, into the wood beyond J. Miller's house, with orders to hold the position as long as possible." M Clellan's Official Report, Rebellion Record, Companion Vol. page 629. Docs.

On the 24th of March the regiment was transferred to the Second Brigade, Second Division of the Twelfth Corps, composed of the Twenty-ninth, One Hundred and Ninth, One Hundred and Eleventh, One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Pennsylvania regiments, commanded by General Kane, and moved with it for duty to Acquia Creek Landing. At daybreak on the 27th of April, the regiment broke camp and moved on its final campaign, and after a rapid march, crossing the Rappahannock and Rapidan rivers, at Kelly's and Germania fords, arrived at Chancellorsville on the evening of the 30th. On the morning of the 1st of May, the brigade advanced on the plank road leading east, and halted at a recently cleared ground. Knapsacks were thrown aside and line of battle formed, when the order to advance was given. At the edge of the pine woods through which it moved, the line was halted, and at the moment when Colonel Higgins and Major Lawrence were raising their field-glasses to view the wood beyond, the enemy opened with his artillery. Discovering that he was in the immediate front in heavy force, the brigade was shortly after withdrawn, and returned to the position which it had left. During the afternoon, the timber in front was felled and an abattis formed. Towards evening the enemy approached and opened fire, but was driven back, and during the whole night the men were kept busy throwing up earth-works, the enemy's skirmishers the while keeping up a sharp fire. At evening of the 2d, the right wing of the army was broken, and as the fugitives from the front came pouring back, the Twelfth Corps became the rallying point, and with it the rout was stayed. The night which succeeded was one of turmoil and battle. At day dawn the fighting was renewed with redoubled fury. Grape and canister were showered upon the ranks, and many fell, Lieutenant Jesse S. Stewart being numbered among the killed. At ten A. M., after having held the ground against the most desperate assaults, it fell back to the new line of battle, and during the night of the 4th was kept in motion to meet the exigencies of the fight. On the morning of the 5th, the regiment was ordered to the left of the line, where it was employed in constructing works, and where it remained until the morning of the 6th, when it re-crossed the river and returned to Acquia Landing. Its term of service had now expired, and taking leave of camps and battle, it returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 18th, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment.

TWO companies, F and I, of this regiment, were recruited in Juniata county. The remaining, with the exception of about half of company B, from Fulton, were exclusively from Franklin county. They were recruited in about three weeks' time, and rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, between the 6th and 10th of August, 1862, when a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: James G. Elder, Colonel; D. Watson Rowe, Lieutenant Colonel; James C. Austin, Major. Many of the officers and men had served in the Second Regiment, for three months' service. On the 15th, the regiment proceeded to Washington, and crossing the Potomac, encamped for a week at Fort Albany, when it moved to the neighborhood of Cloud's Mills, and was there assigned to a brigade* commanded by General E. B. Tyler. Drill and discipline was at once commenced, and studiously followed. On the 31st, six companies under Lieutenant Colonel Rowe, were ordered to proceed with a section of artillery to the Bull Run Bridge, on the Centreville Road. But before the detachment had moved, the disasters of the army and its retreat across that stream were known, and the order was countermanded. On the same day, companies A and B were detailed as guard to an ammunition train on its way to the front, and company K was sent to Fairfax Station to care for the wounded there collected.

Until the 12th of September the regiment remained at the fortifications in front of Washington.† The division then crossed to Meridian Hill, and on the * Organization of the First Brigade, General E. B. Tyler, Third Division, General A. A. Humphreys, Fifth Corps, General Fitz John Porter. Ninety-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Edgar M. Gregory; One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel James G. Elder; One Hundred and Twenty-Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Jacob G. Frick; One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Matthew S Quay.

† A melancholy, but romantic incident which occurred at this time, is thus related by Judge Rowe in his "Sketch of the Regiment:" "Before we follow the regiment from Washington, a bit of romance connected with its history is to be chronicled. William Fitzpatrick, of Western Virginia, loved or was loved by Frances Day. Fitzpatrick enlisted in company F, from Juniata county, and went to the war with the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment. In a short time he fell ill, and on the 24th of August, 1862, whilst the regiment lay at Cloud's Mills, he died in the hospital at Alexandria. On the day he died, Frank Mayne, a Sergeant of company F, unaccountably deserted. When he enlisted he was a stranger to all the men of that company, but in a few days he had so ingratiated himself with his comrades and officers, as to be promoted to Sergeant. He was not heard of any more while the regiment remained in service. But long after, in the far West, a soldier, wounded badly in a 14th, commenced the march towards Antietam, arriving on the 16th on the Monocacy, where Tyler's Brigade lay until the afternoon of the 17th, a large body of paroled Union prisoners, surrendered by Miles at Harper's Ferry passing by in the meantime. At three P. M., the march for the battle-field was resumed, and upon its arrival on the following morning, received twenty additional rounds of ammunition, and took position in reserve with the rest of Porter's Corps. But the fighting had now ended, and as the enemy withdrew, the brigade advanced to the river bank, and finally went into camp near Sharpsburg. The regiment was now near home, and received many visits from neighbors and friends of the men, who came bearing provisions and delicacies. The State colors were presented here, and the division was reviewed by President Lincoln. With the exception of a reconnoissance made by Humphreys' Division, with cavalry and artillery into Virginia, as far as Leestown, in which little resistance was encountered, there was little to mar the monotony of camp life while the regiment remained in Maryland. The visit of ladies of Waynesburg, and the presentation to company E of a beautiful banner, formed a most pleasing incident.

With the army the regiment moved to Warrenton, and subsequently to the neighborhood of Falmouth. At four o'clock on the morning of the 11th of December, it moved from camp for its initial battle. For two days it was held in suspense, the music of bands and the heavy booming of Burnside's cannon filling the air. On the 13th the brigade crossed the Rappahannock, on the upper bridge, and passing up through the town, was led at half-past three out on the Telegraph Road to a low meadow on the right, where it was exposed to a heavy fire of artillery, without shelter and without the ability to offer the least resistance. The only alternative was to stand in silence, and await swift destruction. After a little delay it was ordered to the left of the road, under cover of a hill. The road was swept by the enemy's shells, and the bullets of his sharp-shooters, and here Lieutenant Harry C. Fortescue was instantly killed. Three fruitless attempts had already been made to carry the frowning heights above, and now Humphreys' Division was ordered up for a final charge, for Burnside had said, "That crest must be carried to-night." Forming his brigade in two lines, the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth on the right of the second line, with orders to the men not to fire, but rely solely upon the bayonet, Tyler sounded the charge. Forward went that devoted brigade, uttering heroic cheers, ascending the hill in well ordered lines, and on past the brick house on Marye's Hill, over the prostrate lines of the last charging column, and up within a moment's dash of the stone-wall where the enemy lay. But now that fatal wall was one sheet of flame, and to add to the horror of the situation, the troops in the rear opened, every flash in the twilight visible. Bewildered, and for a moment irresolute, the troops commenced firing. This was fatal. The momentum of the charge was lost, and staggering back to the cover of the house, and descending the declivity, re-formed at the foot of the hill. At the head of his men, heroically urging them on at the farthest point in the charge, Colonel Elder fell, severely wounded. The loss in that great battle, could not conceal her sex, and Frances Day then told how she had followed Fitzpatrick into the army, and became herself a soldier and a Sergeant in the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers; of her desertion upon her lover's death, and the abandon and despair which led her again to seek the ranks of the army. To verify her story letters were written to the officers of company F, at Mifflintown, and thus the mystery of the Sergeant's desertion was dispelled."

brief charge was twenty-seven killed, fifty wounded, and three missing. Captains John Dœbler, John P. Wharton, and John H. Walker, and Lieutenants James Pott, Josiah W. Fletcher, and William H. Mackey, were among the wounded. "It will be impossible for me," says General Tyler in his official report, "to mention the many acts of heroism on that bloody field; but it is due to the officers and men to state that they performed their duties well, and they need no higher encomium than to know that their conduct on the field was highly complimented by their Division and Grand Division commanders." "No prettier sight was ever seen," said Hooker, as he turned to leave the field after the failure of the assault, "than the charge of that division."

At nine o'clock the brigade returned to town, but at three on the following morning was again led to the scene of the evening's charge. Everything was now quiet. Lieutenant Walker with a detail was sent out and diligently searched the field for the wounded. In the morning the brigade was relieved and again returned. Toward midnight of the 15th, the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth was sent out beyond the town, on the advanced picket line, the army, in the meantime, rapidly re-crossing the stream. Towards daylight, a company of the Ninety-first and a body of Berdan's sharp-shooters were sent to its aid, and with these acting as skirmishers on flank and rear, it moved in the morning light, the last of the army over.

With an experience of suffering and hardship similar to that of the whole army beside, it participated in the Mud March, and after, settled down in camp, where it remained until the opening of the Chancellorsville Campaign. At mid-day of the 27th of April, with an effective force of twenty-nine officers and five hundred and seventy-seven men, the regiment moved with the corps, and crossing the Rappahannock and Rapidan, arrived at the Chancellor House at noon of the 1st of May. Shortly afterwards, Griffin's and Humphreys' divisions moved out five miles to a commanding position, in sight of Banks' Ford, Slocum's Corps and Sykes' Division of the Fifth, moving simultaneously upon the Plank Road and turnpike, all leading in the direction of Fredericksburg. The open ground, well adapted for defence, had scarcely been attained, when the order was given to counter-march, Tyler's Brigade moving at double-quick, and arriving just in time to escape the enemy, who was pressing in force upon Sykes. On the following morning, Humphreys' Division moved near to the Rappahannock, in the vicinity af Scott's Dam, where it held a formidable position on high and steep bluffs, which were made to bristle with artillery. During the evening and night succeeding, while Jackson was making his famous onslaught on the Eleventh Corps, the regiment lay in this position, the enemy occasionally making his appearance, but showing no disposition to attack. Early on Sunday morning, Tyler's Brigade was re-called and hurried away towards the right, arriving at the open ground on the Ely's Ford Road at eight o'clock. It was immediately put in position on the right of General French, its left resting in the air, the First Corps not being up to join it. Hardly was it in position, when the enemy attacked, coming on in double line of battle, reaching out to envelop its right. For nearly two hours, and until its ammunition was completely exhausted, and that found upon the persons of the dead and wounded had been used, did this gallant brigade hold its position against twice its numbers, pressing it in front and overlapping it in flank. Supports were loudly called for, and repeated demands for ammunition were made, but in vain. Neither were at hand. Finally with ranks fearfully decimated, and with only the bayonet left for defense, it was forced to fall back, and emerging from the thick woods in its rear, re-formed in the open field in support of batteries. The enemy pressed closely after, but as he swarmed out upon the edge of the clearing, the guns opened with grape and canister, and his advance was checked. The regiment remained in support of these guns until the First Corps had gained its position, when it retired a short distance and remained inactive until daylight of the 6th, and then re-crossed the river and returned to camp. The loss was nine killed, forty-nine wounded, and eleven taken prisoners. Lieutenant Colonel Rowe, Captain John H. Walker and Lieutenant John G. Rowe were among the wounded. General Tyler in his official report says: "The One Hundred and Twenty sixth, Lieutenant Colonel Rowe, was third in line, and for earnest, spirited work, they could not be excelled. Colonel Rowe exhibited the true characteristics of a soldier—brave, cool, and determined, and his spirit was infused into every officer and soldier of his command." A week after the battle, the term of service of the regiment having expired, and returning to Harrisburg, it was on the 20th mustered out.

One Hundred and Twenty-Seventh Regiment.

On the 7th of July, 1862, William W. Jennings, a citizen of Harrisburg, received authority to recruit a regiment for nine months' service. Seven companies, A, B, C, D, F, G, and H, were recruited in Dauphin county, company E was recruited in Lebanon, I, in Adams and Lebanon, and K, in Lebanon and Schuylkill. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, when, on the 16th of August, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: William W. Jennings, Colonel; Henry C. Alleman, Lieutenant Colonel; Jeremiah Rohrer, Major. Company A was detached from the regiment soon after its organization, by order of General Wool, in command of the department, and assigned to provost duty in the city of Harrisburg. Just previous to the expiration of its term of service, this company was ordered to Washington, but never re-joined the regiment. The remaining nine companies, eight hundred and sixty-nine strong, broke camp on the 17th, and proceeded to Washington. The Peninsula campaign had terminated disastrously, and the legions of Lee were moving down upon Pope in the valley of Virginia. For ten days the regiment was encamped on Arlington Heights, with other new regiments. It was brigaded with the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth New Jersey, and the Twenty-seventh Connecticut, and on the 23d assigned to duty in guarding Chain Bridge, where it remained until the opening of winter, Colonel Jennings commanding the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Alleman the regiment.

At the beginning of December, upon the eve of Burnside's movement upon Fredericksburg, Colonel Jennings was ordered to proceed with his regiment to Falmouth, where he arrived on the 9th, and was assigned to the Third Brigade,* of the Second Division, Second Corps. During the night of the 10th, the engineers commenced laying pontoon bridges in front of the town, but before they were completed, the workmen were driven away by the enemy's sharp-shooters, concealed in houses along the waters' edge. Defeated in his first essay, Burnside ordered up his heavy guns, and opened upon the town. During the bombardment, the regiment supported batteries, and when this failed of effect, Burnside called for volunteers to cross in boats and drive out the rebel sharp-shooters. A party from Hall's Brigade was chosen, among whom were members of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh, and leaping to the boats, and pulling lustily in the face of a shower of bullets, they succeeded in reaching the opposite shore. After a brief struggle the enemy was driven and the bridge was completed. Hall's Brigade was the first to cross, and immediately commenced skirmishing to clear the town. Concealed in houses and coverts, from which they could fire with impunity upon the advancing troops, the rebels clung to their shelter, and by their unerring aim caused grievous slaughter. Captain William Fox was the first man in the regiment hit, being instantly killed while crossing the river. Half of the town was thus skirmished through, the enemy leaving the houses from one side as the Union troops were entering at the other, when the brigade was ordered to halt and occupy the ground gained, and the columns of Sumner commenced crossing. During the night of the 11th, a Sergeant and a squad of eleven men were captured and carried prisoners to Richmond. A fierce fire of artillery was opened upon the town on the following morning, and the streets were torn by solid shot; but the brigade held manfully to its work. At a little after noon of the 13th, when repeated attempts to carry the heights in front of the town had failed, Owen's Brigade, to which the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh was temporarily attached, was led to the assault. Moving out to the low, open ground to the left of the city, all the while under a fierce fire of artillery in front, and a flank fire from a deflection in the hills to the right, Owen formed his men in line of battle, the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh on the left of the One Hundred and Sixth, and dashed forward to his desperate task. Braver hearts never beat than filled the bosoms of the men in that devoted line. Onward they went over the prostrate forms of the dead and the dying, and up to within seventy-five yards of the enemy's lines. But the storm of deadly missiles was here too terrible to breast, and they dropped prostrate upon the ground, and commenced screening themselves behind the dead bodies of their fallen comrades, with which the whole plain was strewn. To raise a head was instant death. In this perilous position the regiment lay for hours, exposed to a pitiless fire of musketry and artillery, and until night had put an end to the contest, when it was relieved with the brigade, and returned to the town. At the conclusion of the battle, it retired to its former camp beyond Falmouth. The loss in the engagement was very severe, being two hundred and fifty-seven killed and wounded. Captain William Fox and Lieutenant James S. Shoemaker were among the killed, and Colonel Jennings, Lieutenant Colonel Alleman, Adjutant A. L. Chayne, Captains James Henderson, and John J. Ball, and Lieutenants James B. Keene, Marcus Novinger, Hudson Denny, Jerome W. Henry, J. W. Dougherty, and William R. Orth, among the wounded, the latter mortally.

The regiment was soon after settled in comfortable quarters, and was employed during the winter in picket and guard duty. On the 27th of April, at the opening of the Chancellorsville Campaign, the Second Division, now commanded by General Gibbon, moved out to the front of Fredericksburg, and having laid a pontoon bridge, crossed on the 3d of May. Gibbon was joined in the town by Sedgwick's Corps, which had crossed below, and during the night had moved up to the city. An assaulting column was formed, and those frowning heights which had been so successfully defended by the enemy on the previous December, were now triumphantly carried, prisoners, small arms and guns falling to the hands of the victors. Lieutenant Colonel Alleman was wounded in the side, and thrown from his horse. The enemy retreated towards Chancellorsville, and was closely followed by Sedgwick as far as Salem Church, where Lee, having turned back from Hooker's front, fell upon and crushed Sedgwick's Corps, compelling it to withdraw to the left bank of the Rappahannock, by Banks' Ford. In the meantime, Gibbon, who had been left to hold Fredericksburg, took position around the city, and commenced throwing up rifle-pits. With no barrier left to oppose him, the enemy pushed forward from his triumph over Sedgwick, and soon made his appearance in Gibbon's front, where sharp skirmishing ensued. His position was held until the morning of the 4th, when, under cover of a dense fog, he re-crossed the river. The loss of the regiment in the engagement was fifty-three killed and wounded. Lieutenant Jacob R. Knisley was among the killed, and Lieutenants David Hummel, Jr., William P. Carmany, and J. W. Dougherty were among the wounded. The nine months' term of service of the regiment expired on the 14th, and in pursuance of orders, it was relieved and returned to Harrisburg, where, two days thereafter, it was mustered out of service. During its brief term of duty at the front, of a little more than five months, it was engaged in two pitched battles unsurpassed in severity, and lost an aggregate of four officers and eighteen men killed, fourteen men who died of wounds, sixteen who died of disease, thirty-eight who were discharged by reason of disability, eleven who were captured, ten officers and one hundred and twenty-two men who were wounded, and three officers who resigned.

One Hundred and Twenty-Eighth Regiment.

THE One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Regiment was recruited in response to the proclamation of the Governor, of July 21st, 1862, calling for troops to serve for nine months. Companies A, B, E, H, I, and K, were recruited in Berks county, D, and G, in Lehigh, and C, and F, in Bucks. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, and were mustered into the United States service from the 13th to the 15th of August. A meeting of the line officers was held, at which W. W. Hamersly, of Lehigh county, was chosen Lieutenant Colonel, and Joel B. Wanner, of Berks county, Major, and were subsequently commissioned by the Governor. No choice of Colonel was made, the sentiment strongly prevailing that a person of military experience should be selected for that position. On the 16th, the regiment was ordered to Washington, and as as no field officers had yet been commissioned, it moved under command of Captain William H. Andrews, of company E. Soon after its arrival at the Capital, it crossed the Potomac, and encamped for a week on Arlington Heights. On the 21st it moved to Fairfax Seminary, and on the 29th to Fort Woodbury, where, for a week, during which the fierce fighting at Bull Run and Chantilly occurred, it was incessantly engaged in felling timber, and erecting fortifications. In the meantime, Captain Samuel Croasdale, of Bucks county, had been appointed Colonel, and the staff selected.

On the 6th of September, the regiment in light marching order, re-crossed the Potomac, and entered on the Maryland campaign. At Frederick City, where it arrived on the 14th, it was assigned to Crawford's Brigade, of Williams' Division, Mansfield's (formerly Banks') Corps, composed of the Twenty-eighth New York, Forty-sixth Pennsylvania, Tenth Maine, Fifth Connecticut, and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth, and One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania regiments. Moving rapidly forward, the command arrived at evening in front of South Mountain, where it was held in position during the night in expectation of a renewal of the battle, which had been fiercely raging during the day, on the following morning. But the enemy retired, and late on the evening of the 16th, it arrived at Antietam Creek, the troops across the stream under Hooker having already opened the battle. At eleven o'clock on the same evening, it was led across to their support, and at two on the morning of the 17th, bivouacked in a ploughed field, in immediate proximity to the hostile lines. At early dawn the battle opened, and the brigade was immediately advanced in close column of company. At half-past six A. M., the regiment was ordered into the fight, and made a most gallant charge through the wood and into the memorable corn-field, where the enemy lay concealed. Unfortunately the charge was made by the flank, and before the regiment could be formed in line, the fire of the enemy had become very hot. While in the act of giving his orders, and bringing his command into position, Colonel Croasdale was instantly killed, and soon afterward Lieutenant Colonel Hamersly was severely wounded, and borne from the field. Fresh from civil life, hardly a month in service, with two of their commanding officers stricken down before their eyes, and comrades falling on every hand, the men fell into some confusion. This was, however, soon corrected, and the command held the ground where the struggle had been most desperate, and where the regiment lost some of the bravest and the best. It was finally relieved by order of General Williams, in command of the division, and rested on the field until night-fall. The loss was beyond measure severe, being thirty-four killed, and eighty-five wounded, of whom six subsequently died of their wounds. In addition to the Colonel, Captain William H. Andrews, under whose command the regiment was originally led to the field, and who had exhibited the most determined courage in the fight, was among the killed.

After the battle, the regiment was alternately encamped at Sandy Hook and on Maryland Heights, at the latter place being employed in constructing fortifications. Clothing, which had been much needed, was finally obtained, and a school for the instruction of officers of the new regiments, presided over by Major Mathews, of the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania, was established. In the meantime, Major Wanner resigned, and resumed the duties of his office as Mayor of the city of Reading, which position he had left to recruit this regiment. Lieutenant Colonel Hamersly, whose arm had been terribly torn and mutilated, being unable to resume command, the line officers united in a petition to the Governor for the appointment of Major Mathews to its command. He was accordingly commissioned Colonel, and subsequently Captain Cephas W. Dyer, Major. Upon assuming command, Colonel Mathews, who was a strict disciplinarian, made a sensible address, in which he gave some most excellent advice and admonition, complimented it for its bravery at Antietam, and concluded in a patriotic strain of devotion to the country. Squad, company, and battalion drill, for which it had had little opportunity before, was now studiously prosecuted, and it soon attained a high degree of proficiency. On the 10th of December, the Twelfth Corps, which had been left to hold the upper Potomac, when the rest of the army advanced to Warrenton, was ordered to move rapidly to Fredericksburg, Burnside being on the point of attacking the enemy at that point. On the 16th the regiment arrived at the Neabsco River, where it was halted, and on the following day turned back to Fairfax Station, the struggle at Fredericksburg being over. With the exception of toilsome marching on the 28th, after Stuart's Cavalry, it remained in camp until the 19th of January, 1863, when it proceeded to Stafford Court House, upon the occasion of Burnside's second abortive campaign. It was here placed in winter-quarters, and was employed in guard and picket duty until the opening of the spring campaign under Hooker. While here, Lieutenant Colonel Hamersley, being permanently disabled by the wounds received at Antietam, resigned, and Captain L. Heber Smith was commissioned to succeed him.

On the 1st of May, the corps having reached Chancellorsville, the brigade was ordered to entrench on the Plank Road leading through the Wilderness. Later in the day the regiment was moved out to the United States Ford, to open the way over the Rappahannock, but returned again at evening to the entrenchments. During the night it was ordered out upon the front, where it remained until morning, and during the day participated in the fighting upon the left centre. At evening, the enemy succeeded in breaking the right wing of the army, and coming in upon the flank, occupied the Union works. The night was very dark, and in retiring to its original line, the regiment suddenly found itself in the clutches of the foe. Colonel Mathews, Lieutenant Colonel Smith, Captains William B. M'Nall, George Newkirk, Richard H. Jones, Frederick M. Yeager, and Peter C. Huber, Lieutenants John Obold, and James H. Anthony, and two hundred and twenty-five non-commissioned officers and men were taken prisoners and marched to Richmond. The balance of the regiment, under command of Captain Kennedy, succeeded in reaching its position in the line, which it held with the utmost tenacity, losing Captain Richards, and a number of men wounded, the battle raging on this part of the field with great violence. The brigade having suffered severely during the preceding two days, was, on the afternoon of the 3d, ordered to the rear as guard to prisoners, and crossed the Rappahannock at United States Ford; but in a few hours was ordered to return, and was again summoned to the front. At the close of the battle, the regiment, now reduced to one hundred and seventy-two men, returned to Stafford Court House. On the 12th of May, the term of service having expired, it was relieved from duty and proceeded to Harrisburg, where, on the 19th, it was mustered out. Colonel Mathews and the officers and men who were taken prisoners, were held but a short time in captivity, returning in time to be mustered out with the rest of the command. Upon its return to Reading, it was honorably received by the authorities and citizens, and was there finally disbanded.

One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment.

Five companies of this regiment, A, B, E, G, and H, were recruited in Schuylkill county, four, C, D, F, and K, in Northampton, and one company, I, was recruited in Montgomery. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where, on the 15th of August, 1862, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: Jacob G. Frick, of Schuylkill county, Colonel; William H. Armstrong, of Northampton county, Lieutenant Colonel; Joseph Anthony, of Schuylkill county, Major. Colonel Frick had served with credit as Lieutenant in the Mexican War, and as Lieutenant Colonel of the Ninety-sixth Pennsylvania Regiment, until the 29th of July, 1862. On the day following its organization, after having been hastily armed and equipped, it was hurried away to Washington, and on the 18th went into camp in the neighborhood of Alexandria. Company and regimental drill was early commenced, and by the active and intelligent efforts of its Colonel, the regiment rapidly attained a marked degree of efficiency. While the command was stationed here, two companies were detailed to re-build a bridge across Bull Run, where they remained as guard. On the 30th the remaining companies, after having been held for four days in constant readiness to march, proceeded as guard to an ammunition train to Centreville, passing on the way the corps of Fitz John Porter, in light marching order, bound for the front. The cannonading had been heavy throughout the day. Towards evening it rapidly came nearer, and at five P. M., after having safely delivered the train, the command was, for the first time, under fire, the rebel artillery throwing shells into the woods near Centreville, where it was resting. Proceeding on its return to Fairfax Seminary, it was brigaded on the 3d of September with the Ninety-first, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania regiments, commanded by General E. B. Tyler. Brigade, battalion, and company drills were studiously practiced, and on the 7th its camp was changed to a point near Fort Richardson.

On the morning of the 14th, the brigade started on the march through Maryland, arrived at the Monocacy on the 16th, where it was halted, and on the 17th resumed the march to the sound of heavy cannonading, arriving early on the following morning on the field of Antietam. But the enemy had by this time retired, and the command soon after went into camp, where for six weeks, with the exception of an expedition up the Shenandoah Valley with the division, the regiment remained engaged in drill and unimportant picket duty. On the 30th of October the army commenced crossing into Virginia, and moving down the valley, continuing the movement, with a slight interruption at Warrenton, until it arrived opposite Fredericksburg, and Burnside's bloody, but fruitless campaign was inaugurated. Shortly after noon of the 13th of December, the division crossed the Rappahannock, and proceeding through the town to a position in full view of the field, awaited the order to enter the fight. It was not long delayed, and again advancing by a main road, the brigade halted in low, open ground, where the men were ordered to lie down. Tempted by the easy range and unprotected situation of the brigade, the enemy opened a destructive fire from his batteries, by which Lieutenant Jacob Parvin, Jr., was mortally, and a number of privates severely wounded. Moving to the left of the road, the division was shortly after formed in line of battle on the crest of the hill, the brigade in two lines, the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth on the left front. In the hopeless and fruitless charge which followed, made under a ceaseless fire of musketry and artillery from the impregnable position which the enemy held, officers and men did everything that true soldiers could do, traversing in good order the lines of dead and wounded left in previous charges, and pressing forward in the gathering darkness until they attained position in advance of every previous charge, and from which it was impossible to go farther. In the brief space that it was in motion, the regiment lost one hundred and forty-two in killed and wounded. The caps of some were subsequently found close up to the famous stone-wall, and an officer and seven privates of company D were taken prisoners. Captains George J. Lawrence, and Jonathan K. Taylor, were mortally wounded. Captain Taylor was shot through the lungs early in the charge, but refused to leave the field, and retired with his command. Captains William Wren, Jr., Herbert Thomas, E. Godfrey Rehrer, and Levi C. Leib, and Lieutenant A. A. Lukenbach, were wounded. Lieutenant Joseph Oliver was wounded and fell into the enemy's hands. The loss in killed was sixteen. General Tyler in his official report of the battle, says: "Colonel O'Brien, One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, led the right front; Colonel Frick, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth, the left; Colonel Elder, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth, held the right rear, and Colonel Gregory, Ninety-first, the left rear. These officers discharged their respective duties creditably and satisfactorily, their voices being frequently heard above the din of battle, urging on their men against the terrible shower of shot and shell, and the terrific musketry, as we approached the stone wall. Of their conduct I cannot speak too highly. Lieutenant Colonel Rowe, Lieutenant Colonel Armstrong, Major Anthony, and Major Thompson, are entitled to great credit, for their efforts and officer-like conduct during the engagement. * * * Lieutenant Colonel Armstrong had a horse shot under him. Adjutant Green exhibited great coolness in the discharge of his duty. It may not be improper for me to say that Captain Thomas, Acting Inspector General on the staff of the division commander, having his horse shot, and thus prevented from serving him, joined his company in the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth, and was severely wounded while leading his men in the charge."

After dark the regiment was again marched upon the field for guard duty, but was withdrawn towards midnight. On the 14th and 15th, it remained in the town, losing one man by the shot of a sharp-shooter, and on the morning of the 16th, after having spent the night in throwing up a breast-work on the right of the town, re-crossed the river and retired again to camp. The knapsacks which had been thrown aside before going into battle, had been carefully guarded, but were not recovered. During the cold rainy days preceding the 23d of December, when extra clothing and blankets were furnished to supply the place of those lost, the men suffered greatly from exposure, one dying, and many being thrown into hospitals. Drill and picket duty, which was at times severe, the Mud March from the 20th to the 24th of January, 1863, and occasional reviews, filled up the measure of its duty until the opening of Hooker's first campaign. *

The regiment marched with the corps on the Chancellorsville campaign, though the time of many of the men had already expired, and took part in the fighting of the 1st, 2d, and 3d of May. In the principal contest on the morning of the 3d, it was closely engaged in its place in the division line of battle in the wood in front of the Union batteries. After nearly two hours of sharp musketry firing, the ammunition became exhausted, and the right flank of the division was turned. The command was given to face by the rear rank and retire, in order that the batteries might have full play upon the rebel columns coming in upon the flank. It was executed in as orderly a manner as the thickly wooded ground would permit, but the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth, bringing up the rear, had not left the wood before the enemy closed upon it, and some spirited hand-to-hand encounters occurred. The colors were twice seized, but were defended with great gallantry, and brought safely off. Lieutenant Colonel Armstrong fell into the enemy's hands, but made his escape in the confusion caused in his ranks by the fire of the Union batteries. Major Anthony was shot through the lungs, but was assisted off the field, and still survives what was then considered a mortal wound. "The One Hundred and Twenty-ninth," says General Tyler in his official report, "was on our left, and no man ever saw cooler work on field drill than was done by this regiment. Their firing was grand, by rank, by company, and by wing, in perfect order." The loss was five killed, thirty-two wounded, and five missing. On the 6th, the regiment re-crossed the Rappahannock and returned to its camp near Falmouth. On the 12th, its term of service having fully expired, it returned to Harrisburg, where on the 18th of May it was mustered out. The return of companies to Easton and Pottsville was marked by flattering and enthusiastic demonstrations on the part of the citizens.

* Towards the middle of January, an order was issued through division headquarters, requiring the men to draw dress coats. As they had warm underclothing, and had just been provided with two blouses per man, the dress coat did not seem to be needed. It would only be an incumbrance, and a needless expense, and, moreover, their term of service would shortly expire. The officers sought to have their regiment relieved from the operations of the order; but in this they were unsuccessful, and upon their refusal to obey the order, the Colonel and Lieutenant Colonel were summarily tried, and dismissed from the service. They were, however, soon after reinstated, and restored to their commands, the general officer who had preferred charges against them, testifying upon their trial to their fidelity and gallantry.

One Hundred and Thirtieth Regiment.

COMPANIES A, G, D, F, and E, of this regiment, were recruited in Cumberland county. companies B, I, and K, in York, company C was recruited in York and Montgomery, and H, in the counties of Cumberland, Dauphin, and Chester. These companies were mustered into service from the 10th to the 15th of August, and on the 17th a regimental organization was effected, by the selection of the following field officers: Henry I. Zinn, of Cumberland county, Colonel; Levi Maish, of York county, Lieutenant Colonel; John Lee, of Cumberland county, Major. On the day following its organization, the regiment proceeded to Washington, and was immediately thrown across the river. At Camp Wells, two miles in rear of Arlington Heights, it remained for a week, and then moved to Fort Marcy, an earth-work near Chain Bridge, where it was in garrison during the terrible conflict of arms on the plains of Manassas, and at Chantilly, and until after the retreat of Pope to the defenses of Washington.

On the 7th of September, the regiment re-crossed the Potomac, and marched to Rockville, where it was assigned a place in French's Division, of Sumner's Corps, forming part of a brigade organized from raw recruits, comprising in addition to it, the Fourteenth Connecticut, and One Hundred and Eighth New York, commanded by Colonel Dwight Morris, of the Fourteenth Connecticut. On the 13th, the corps reached Frederick, and on the following morning French's Division moved forward, crossing the Catoctin mountains by a road which had been obstructed, and which the pioneers had to clear, and marched rapidly to the support of the troops already warmly engaged in front of Turner's Gap. As night closed in, the sound of battle died away, and the men rested upon the field. At two in the morning the division was aroused, and led to the ground where the struggle of the previous evening had been most severe, and where the men rested upon their arms until morning. Daylight revealed a scene of horror and destruction; ruined houses, scarred trees, the dead stretched as they fell, and the wounded with their ghastly features, which parties with ambulances were busy in removing.

During the day the army moved on over South Mountain, and on the 16th was massed in front of the enemy, on Antietam Creek, Sumner's Corps holding the centre. "My division," says General French, in his official report, "composed of Brigadier Generals Max Weber's and Kimball's brigades, and three regiments of new troops, under the command of Colonel Dwight Morris, having been in readiness since day-break on the 17th instant, was put in motion by order of the General commanding the corps, at about half-past seven o'clock A. M. The Antietam Creek was forded by the division, marching in three columns of brigades, Max Weber on the left, the new regiments in the center, and Kimball's Brigade on the right. When my left flank had cleared the ford a mile, the division faced to the left, forming three lines of battle, adjacent to, and contiguous with Sedgwick's, and immediately moved to the front. The enemy, who was in position in advance, opened his batteries, under which fire my lines steadily moved, until the first line, encountering the enemy's skirmishers, charged them briskly, and entering a group of houses on Roulett's farm, drove back the force which had taken a strong position for defense." The position of the regiment was upon the crest of a hill with a field of corn in front, at the further edge of which, shielded by a stone-wall, the enemy lay. His flag was alone visible, and in this exposed position, only guided by the flash of the enemy's guns, the regiment maintained the unequal contest. For hours it held its position, but at a fearful cost. "The conduct of the new regiments," says General French, "must take a prominent place in the history of this great battle. Un-drilled, but admirably armed and equipped, every regiment, either in advance or reserve, distinguished itself, but according to the energy and ability of their respective commanders. The report of Colonel Morris exhibits the services of his command. There never was such material in any army, and in one month these splendid men will not be excelled by any." The loss of the regiment was forty killed, and two hundred and fifty-six wounded, many of whom died of their wounds. Lieutenant William A. Givler was among the killed, and Lieutenant Colonel Maish, Captain Joseph H. Jenkins, and Lieutenants Levi M. Haverstick, David Z. Seipe and William H. Tomes, among the wounded. Private Thomas Numbers, Messenger and Assistant Clerk in this department, lost his left arm in the midst of the storm of battle that swept the heights in front of that fatal corn-field.

After the battle, the regiment moved to Harper's Ferry, and soon after went into camp on the heights overlooking the town. Here the men suffered severely for want of shelter-tents and hospital supplies, the sick list rapidly increasing. On the 21st of October, the regiment joined the corps in its march through Virginia, and soon after its arrival in the neighborhood of Falmouth, the brigade was detailed for fatigue and guard duty at Belle Plain Landing. On the 5th of December, the brigade was relieved from duty here, and after a toilsome march through deep mud and in the midst of a severe storm, re-joined the division, now busily employed in preparation for the impending battle. At daylight on the 11th, the regiment formed, and with the division moved out to within a mile of the Rappahannock, where it halted, and remained during the day in the woods which skirt the road, the spires of Fredericksburg being visible above the hills where the Union artillery was engaged in bombarding the town. At night, the regiment was detailed with other troops to assist in laying a second pontoon bridge, just above the Lacy House, and opposite the upper end of the city. On the following morning the division crossed and bivouacked in the streets, parts of the city, fired by our shells, still burning. At night, the regiment occupied the ruins of a large brick building on Caroline street. On the morning of the 13th—the day of the great battle—a heavy fog hung over all the valley, completely wrapping the two hostile armies in its heavy folds. As soon as it lifted, a brisk fire of artillery opened along the two wings, from either side. The infantry was finally put in motion, the division of French in advance. As soon as it began to move, and before emerging from the town, it came under a heavy fire of artillery. Proceeding along the plank and telegraph roads, and taking shelter behind a little rise of ground, it formed line of battle by brigade front and sounded the charge. After forming line of battle, the regiment made a charge upon the enemy's breast-works, and were driven back a short distance. As it was re-forming to charge again, the rebels leaped from their defenses and charged in turn. Their advance was awaited until within a short distance, when the regiment again charged upon them, and hurled them back in confusion. It having become apparent that the enemy's works could not be taken by assault, the shattered ranks of the division were ordered back to the city. So fierce and destructive was the fire of the artillery in the rear of the line, that escape from this part of the field was attended with great risk, and many of the One Hundred and Thirtieth remained on the field, behind small elevations of ground that afforded them slight protection, until able to retire under cover of night. "No sooner," says Swinton, "had this division burst out on the plain, than from the batteries above came a frightful fire, cross showers of shot and shell opening great gaps in the ranks; but closing up, the ever-thinning lines pressed on, and had passed over a great part of the interval, when, met by volleys of musketry at short range' they fell back, shattered and broken, with a loss of more than half their number, amid shouts and yells from the enemy." The ranks of the One Hundred and Thirtieth had been greatly reduced by sickness and battle, Lieutenant Colonel Maish not having sufficiently recovered from his wound received at Antietam to re-join the command. Of the small number engaged sixty-two were killed and wounded. At the moment when the storm of battle was raging most fiercely, and when many of the troops around it were falling back, Colonel Zinn seized the flag-staff in his left hand and waiving his sword with the right, cried out, "Stick to your standard, boys! The Hundred and Thirtieth never abandons its standard!" The words had scarcely escaped his lips, when his brain was pierced by a minie ball, and he fell dead. Captain William Laughlin and Lieutenant Franklin G. Torbert were also among the killed. Lieutenants L. M. Haverstick, D. Wilson Grove, and William G. Bosler were among the wounded. On the night of the 15th the regiment re-crossed the river, and with the brigade returned to its camp above Falmouth.

Towards the close of December, shelter-tents were received, and the regiment settled down in comfortable winter-quarters, the monotony of camp life and regular details for picket duty, being little disturbed, with the exception of the movement involved in Burnside's second projected but abortive campaign, until the opening of Hooker's decent upon Chancellorsville.

On the 28th of April the regiment took up the line of march for United States Ford, encamping near the stream on the night of the 30th. On the following day it crossed and moved out to Chancellorsville. A reconnoissance in force was made on the 1st of May by the Fifth and a part of the Second corps, towards Fredericksburg, in which the regiment participated, and the enemy was met. Returning to a position to the right and front of the Chancellor House, the troops were put to fortifying. On the evening of the 2d, Stonewall Jackson drove the Eleventh Corps, holding the right of the line, and came in upon the flank and rear of the position where the regiment stood. It was accordingly ordered to the opposite side of the breast-works, and held in readiness to meet the enemy from a direction the reverse from that anticipated. The mad onset of the foe in his triumph over the Eleventh Corps was checked by the artillery on the right before he had reached the position occupied by the regiment, and during the night it was led to a new line at right angles to that which it had at first occupied, where it remained until morning. The battle opened early on the 3d, and until near midday raged with unparalleled fury. The division then retired to a line which had been selected for a final stand, where it remained until the close of the battle. Their loss in the engagement was severe. Lieutenant Colonel Maish and Lieutenant John Hays were among the wounded. On the 12th of May the term of enlistment expired, and returning to Harrisburg the regiment was, on the 21st, mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Thirty-First Regiment.

THIS regiment was recruited in the central portion of the State, companies C, D, and F, in Northumberland county, H, I, and K, in Lycoming, B, and E, in Mifflin, A, in Union, and G, in Snyder. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where a regimental organization was effected by the selection of the following field officers: Peter H. Allabach, Colonel: William B. Shaut, Lieutenant Colonel; Robert W. Patton, Major. Colonel Allabach had served a period of five years in the regular army, and had performed faithful duty in the campaigns in Mexico, under Taylor and Scott. Major Patton was a member of the Logan Guards, one of the first five companies in service at the breaking out of the rebellion, and other of the officers and men had served during the short term. Within twenty-four hours after its organization the regiment was on its way to the front, and the day following its arrival at Washington, it was ordered into Virginia and was assigned to the Third Provisional Brigade, Colonel Allabach assuming command. A Washington paper of August 21st notices as a remarkable incident, that a Colonel of one of the regiments passing down Pennsylvania Avenue for the Long Bridge, was on foot. The allusion was to the leader of the One Hundred and Thirty-first. A week later the regiment was moved to the neighborhood of Alexandria, and changes were effected in the brigade organization, whereby it was made to consist of the One Hundred and Thirty-first, One Hundred and Thirty-third, One Hundred and Twenty-third and the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Regiments. General Briggs was assigned to its command, but owing to sickness never joined it, the leadership falling by seniority to Colonel Allabach, which he held until the close of his term of service. The command of the regiment consequently devolved on Lieutenant Colonel Shaut. On the 1st of September the brigade moved to the neighborhood of Fairfax Seminary, under the guns of Fort Ward, and was engaged in picket duty on the Leesburg Road and Little River Turnpike, Colonel Allabach reporting immediately to General M'Clellan, now in command of the Military District of Washington. Many stragglers from the disastrous fields of Bull Run and Chantilly were here arrested.

After the opening of the Maryland Campaign the brigade was ordered to Washington, where the regiment exchanged its Austrian rifles for Springfield muskets, and on the 14th of September set forward with the army. While on the march the brigade joined the Third Division commanded by General Humphreys, of the Fifth Corps, to which it had been assigned. At the Monocacy, near Frederick City, it halted and lay in camp until the afternoon of the 17th, when the movement was resumed and at nine o'clock on the morning of the 18th, after a forced march of twenty-three miles arrived on the battle-field of Antietam, taking position in line and relieving troops exhausted and begrimmed by the fighting of the previous day. On the following morning it was found that the enemy had disappeared, and after following to the Potomac, the brigade retired to camp near Sharpsburg, and was engaged in picket duty along the river. The weather, in the meantime, was excessively hot, and much sickness prevailed in the regiment, one hundred and seventy-six being on the sick list at one time.

At the close of October, the brigade crossed the Potomac, and shared the fortunes of the army in its movement through Virginia, until it arrived in front of Fredericksburg. The preparations for a decisive battle, which had been in progress since the advent of Burnside to the chief command, were finally completed, and on the 11th of December the brigade moved from camp to participate in the desperate struggle. It lay near the Phillips' House until the afternoon of the 13th, when it was ordered to move, and at three o'clock crossing on the upper pontoon bridge, marched through the town under a ceaseless cannonade, and on out through the suburbs to a little hill on the left of the road, under cover of which the line of battle was formed. When all was ready, the word to advance was given, and at a double-quick it moved forward. Two hundred yards in front it encountered a mass of our own men, remnants of a previous charge, lying prostrate on the ground. Instinctively the men dropped, and opened fire upon the enemy, who was lying under cover of a stone-wall in front. The line was soon after re-formed, and advanced to within thirty yards * of the wall, keeping up a steady fire. Failing to make any impression, the command was withdrawn, after having been an hour and a half under fire, the regiment having lost twenty-one killed, one hundred and thirty-two wounded, and twenty-four missing. The regiment rested at night upon the field, and at three on the following morning it was aroused, and receiving a fresh supply of ammunition, was posted behind the little hill which had afforded protection while forming on the previous afternoon. It was here exposed to a constant fire from the enemy's sharp-shooters, losing one killed and one wounded. This position was held until dark of the 14th, when the regiment was relieved, and retiring, slept that night on the streets of Fredericksburg. During the day following, the 15th, it remained in the town, and at evening moved to the right to the support of artillery. At midnight it was taken to the extreme left of the town, and at three in the morning, evacuated the place and marched in a drenching rain to the camp which it had left near Potomac Creek. Captain George W. Ryan, and Lieutenant William A. Bruner, were killed; Captains David A. M'Manigal, and Isaiah B. Davis, and

* "The body of one man, supposed to be an officer, was found within about thirty yards of the stone-wall, and other single bodies were scattered at increased distances, until the main mass of the dead lay thickly strewn over the ground, at something over one hundred yards off, extending to the ravine, commencing at the point where our men would allow the enemy's column to approach before opening fire, and beyond which no organized body of men were able to pass."—General M'Law's (Rebel) Official Report.

Lieutenants D. D. Mutthersbough, D. L. Green, Grant S. Waters, and Joseph M. Irwin, were severely wounded, and Captains Charles Davis, and Joseph S. Waream slightly wounded.

The regiment was soon settled in comfortable winter-quarters, where it remained until the 20th of January, 1863. On that day it moved from camp for a second campaign under Burnside, and after a toilsome march of two miles, bivouacked for the night. For two days it staggered on through the pelting storm, at the end of which the campaign was abandoned, and for two days more it was engaged in building corduroy roads, moving trains, and in getting back to camp. On the 31st, it moved about two miles to more favorable ground, the new quarters being designated Camp Humphreys. On the 28th of April the brigade broke up winter-quarters, the regiment under command of Major Patton, and moved on the Chancellorsville Campaign, and after considerable delay at the crossing of the Rappahannock, from the moving of troops and trains which had the advance, arrived at the Chancellor House on the 1st of May. After joining in a reconnoissance towards Fredericksburg, in which the enemy was found and his strength developed, the brigade was thrown out towards the Rappahannock, on the left of the line, where it was immediately put to fortifying. The work of strengthening the lines was continued through the night of the 1st, and the day following. At dawn of the 3d the command was aroused, and led hastily to the right centre, where the Union columns were struggling to repair the disasters of the previous evening. It arrived on the ground at seven A. M., and was immediately placed in support of batteries, lying under a hot fire of shot and shell until eleven. It was then moved to the rifle-pits on the new line of battle, where it supported Sykes' Division. In this position it remained until the evening of the 5th, when it retired to United States Ford, and during the greater part of the night was engaged in assisting the trains to cross. When all were over, the brigade followed, and returned to its former camp. The term of service of the regiment expired on the 15th, and in pursuance of orders it returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 23d, after a week spent in Camp Curtin, it was mustered out. In his farewell order to the brigade, General Humphreys said: "When in camp, the officers and men have been zealous in their efforts to acquire knowledge of the duties of a soldier. They have cheerfully performed every duty required of them. They have been prompt and obedient, and have fought as well as the best troops at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville."

One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment.

THIS regiment was from the north central part of the State, and was composed of an unusually fine body of men. Company A was recruited in Montour county, principally from the employees of the Danville Iron Works, B, in Wyoming, C, and D, were recruited in Bradford, E, and H, in Columbia, F, and G, in Carbon, and I, and K, in Luzerne. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were mustered into service from the 11th to the 18th of August, 1862. On the 15th the following field officers were appointed: Richard A. Oakford, of Luzerne county, Colonel; Vincent M. Wilcox, of Luzerne county, Lieutenant Colonel; Charles Albright, of Carbon county, Major. Colonel Oakford had served as Colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment in the three months' service. On the 19th the regiment moved for the front, and passing through Washington, encamped near Fort Corcoran, on the Virginia shore of the Potomac, opposite the Capital. Instruction and drill were immediately commenced, and practiced under the inspiriting music of the guns at Bull Run and Chantilly.

On the evening of the 2d of September, the regiment moved to Rockville, Maryland, a march of twenty-two miles, which it performed in seven hours. It was here assigned to Kimball's Brigade, of French's Division, of Sumner's Corps, composed of the Fourteenth Indiana, Eighth Ohio, Seventh Virginia, and One Hundred and Thirty-second Pennsylvania. On the 13th of September, the regiment made a forced march of thirty-three miles, reaching the battle-field of South Mountain just as the fighting for the day closed. It participated in the pursuit of the enemy across Antietam Creek, and sustained a severe though harmless shell fire, on the afternoon of the 16th. At nine o'clock on the following morning, the regiment met the enemy at close quarters. The position of the brigade was an exposed one, on the centre of the line of battle, and especially trying to new troops for the first time under fire. For four hours the regiment maintained its position without wavering, when, with ammunition exhausted and ranks shattered, it was relieved by the Irish Brigade, and retired in good order. "Every man of my command," says Colonel Kimball, in his official report, "behaved in the most exemplary manner, and as men who had determined to save their country or die. * * * A glance at the position held by the rebels, tells how terrible was the punishment inflicted on them. The corn-fields on the front are strewn with their dead and wounded, and in the ditch first occupied by them, the bodies are so numerous that they seem to have fallen dead in line of battle."* The loss of the regiment was thirty killed, one hundred and fourteen wounded, and eight missing. Colonel Oakford and Lieutenant Anson C. Cranmer, were among the killed.

After the battle, the Second Corps moved to Harper's Ferry, and the regiment was encamped on Bolivar Heights. Lieutenant Colonel Wilcox was promoted to Colonel, Major Albright to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Joseph E. Shreve to Major. During the month of October, it participated in a reconnoissance to Leesburg, and another to Charlestown. On the 31st it joined in a general movement of the army towards the Rappahannock, and arrived at Falmouth, opposite Fredericksburg, on the 6th of November. On the following day it was detached from the brigade, and ordered to duty at Belle Plain Landing. A month later it returned to Falmouth, and commenced preparations for the battle of Fredericksburg. It was assigned to the Third Brigade, Third Division, of the Second Corps. In the charge on Marye's Heights, on the afternoon of the 13th, led by Lieutenant Colonel Albright, the regiment occupied a position in the second line with veteran troops, and showed a heroism in the assault unexcelled by the bravest. Sickness and casualties had reduced the command to three hundred and forty effective men, and of this number it lost one hundred and fifty. Five men and two commissioned officers, Lieutenants Charles M'Dougal and Henry H. Hoagland, were stricken down whilst bearing the colors. The latter was killed while in the act of receiving the flag from the hands of its dying bearer, and waving it on to the conflict. An incident which occurred in this battle, well illustrates the valor and determination which fired the hearts of the citizen soldiery in this war. John Kistler, a private of company F, had his arm blown off at the elbow by a cannon ball, as the regiment entered the fight. With his arm bandaged, he still kept the field, and as the shattered ranks came back from the bloody assault, he rushed up to the Colonel, saying, "We shall whip them yet." As the regiment was returning to town, the color-bearer, who had been severely wounded, weak from the loss of blood, but still clinging to his flag, entered a hospital, where he soon after became insensible, and subsequently died. For the moment, the flag in the midst of the darkness, was not missed, though it was known that the colors were with the command on entering the town. They were found and carried away by the officers of another regiment. A court of inquiry was afterwards held upon the circumstances of its loss, the result of which is shown by the following extract from an order issued by General Howard, in command of the corps. "The last color-bearer, badly wounded, left his regiment after dark, and in the town entered a church used as a hospital, taking his colors with him. He was carried away from this place, and the colors left behind. The very fidelity of the color-bearer, holding to his colors as long as he was conscious, was the occasion of their loss to the regiment. Not only no fault should be found with this regiment, but it should receive unqualified commendation." In an order issued by General French, after reciting the circumstances as given above, and commending its gallantry in the most unqualified terms, he adds: "As the commander of the division, and knowing the character of the One Hundred and Thirty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers, which has fought under my eye in two of the bloodiest engagements of the war, and which has the highest encomiums from its brigade commander, General Kimball, who knows what brave men are, I have deemed it my duty to make this record, to go with whatever may have transpired in reference to this subject during my short absence."

After the return of the regiment from this battle, to near the close of April, 1863, it was encamped near the banks of the Rappahannock, at Falmouth, and performed only the ordinary duties of camp and picket. In January, Colonel Wilcox was honorably discharged, and Lieutenant Colonel Albright promoted to succeed him, Major Shreve to Lieutenant Colonel, and Adjutant Frederick L. Hitchcock to Major. When the movement to Chancellorsville commenced, the term of service of a portion of the men had expired; but when the order to march was received, they buckled on their armour, and without a murmur turned their faces towards the battle-field. Soon after its arrival near Chancellorsville, the One Hundred and Thirty-second was led to the support of the first line, but was withdrawn without coming to a determined engagement, and with the division was held in reserve during the 1st and 2d of May. On the morning of the 3d it was moved rapidly to the front, where, on the previous evening disaster had visited the Union lines. On entering the woods north-west of the Chancellor House, and between that point and the Fredericksburg Plank Road, it received a severe fire from the enemy in his well chosen position, which was briskly returned, and a charge delivered with the bayonet, in which a number of prisoners were taken. In the new line of works, the regiment occupied an advanced position, and held it until the close of the battle, when the division was withdrawn and the retreat commenced. The loss of the regiment in this engagement was about fifty killed and wounded. On the 14th of May, its term of service having fully expired, it was relieved from duty and returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 24th, it was mustered out. In his farewell order, General French expressed the hope that after a brief sojourn at home, the brave men of this regiment, who had passed unscathed through the thickest of the fight in three pitched battles, would again rally around the flag which they had so nobly defended. In this hope he was not disappointed. Two-thirds of the command re-entered the service, and remained until the close of the war. Colonel Albright led out the Two Hundred and Second Regiment, in which were many of his old officers and men, and was subsequently brevetted Brigadier General.

One Hundred and Thirty-third Regiment.

THIS regiment was recruited under authority granted by Governor Curtin, companies A, B, and F, in Cambria county, G, H, and I, in Perry, C, and K, in Bedford, and D, and E, in Somerset. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, from the 1st to the 10th of August, 1862, and on the 21st the following field officers, who had been previously elected by the line officers, were commissioned: Franklin B. Speakman, Colonel; Abraham Kopelin, Lieutenant Colonel; Edward M. Schrock, Major. On the 19th, the regiment proceeded to Washington, and upon its arrival reported to General Casey, by whom it was immediately ordered forward to Arlington Heights. It was here brigaded with the One Hundred and Twenty-third, One Hundred and Thirty-first, and One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania regiments, Colonel Allabach, of the One Hundred and Thirty-first, in command. On the 27th the regiment was ordered to Alexandria, where it remained in camp until the 30th, and was then moved out towards the front as far as Fort Ward, the second battle of Bull Run being at this time in full progress. For two weeks it was employed in picket duty, and in throwing up intrenchments. On the 12th of September it moved to Washington with the brigade, which had been strengthened by the addition of the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania. While on the march, the brigade was attached to Humphreys' Division, of the Fifth Corps. At Washington the arms originally received were exchanged for Springfield muskets, heavy camp equipage was turned over to be stored, company tents were exchanged for light shelter tents, and sixty rounds of ammunition per man were received. On Sunday morning, the 14th, the regiment took up the line of march, to meet, in Maryland, a defiant enemy threatening the border counties of Pennsylvania, where were the homes of the men of this command. At Monocacy the brigade was halted, and remained a day, when the march was resumed and continued until it arrived, on the morning of the 18th, on the battle-field of Antietam. It was immediately formed in line, and awaited a renewal of the battle. On the following morning, the enemy having retired without attempting to seriously contest the ground further, the regiment moved forward over the field, covered with the dead and wounded of both armies, and finally settled down in camp, a mile out of Sharpsburg, on the Shepherdstown Road, where it remained engaged in company and battalion drill, until the movement of the army, near the close of October, into

Virginia, and the inauguration of the Fredericksburg campaign under Burnside. For nearly a month preceding the battle, the regiment was in camp near Falmouth, constantly engaged in drill and in preparations for a decisive battle.

"Between two and three o'clock P. M., on Saturday, the 13th of December," says Colonel Speakman, in his official report, "the regiment, in common with the other regiments of the brigade, was ordered to cross the river. This was successfully done, although the shells from the enemy's batteries were falling thick and fast, and exploding over us. I advanced my regiment as directed, through Fredericksburg, crossed the canal, or race, just outside of the city, and filing to the left, formed line of battle under cover of a small hill. The regiment was placed on the right, and in the advance, the fourth battalion, Colonel Allen, being on our left. Knapsacks were unslung, bayonets fixed, and orders received to charge the works on Marye's Heights. We charged up and over the hill, about two hundred and fifty yards, when we came upon a line of troops, lying down. My men, not knowing that they were to pass over this line, covered themselves as well as they could in the rear of this line. The troops in front, neither advancing nor retreating, and a second charge being ordered, I passed over the prostrate troops, charged to the right of, and past the Brick House, and to within about fifty yards of the stone-wall, and to the left of the house, to the crest of the hill. These positions were held for an hour, under a most terrific fire from the enemy's infantry and artillery, and until dusk, when I was ordered by General Humphreys to withdraw, which I did, and re-formed line of battle on the right of the road, and a little in rear of where our original line for the charge had been formed. Here we remained for a time, only sending out squads to scour the fields and bring off our killed and wounded. At three o'clock A. M., on Sunday morning, the 14th, the regiment was marched into the city, and near to the river, where we were furnished with a fresh supply of ammunition, and again ordered on the field. We were posted under cover of a small hill, though still exposed to the enemy's fire. At seven in the evening we were ordered into Fredericksburg, where we remained until Tuesday morning, when we re-crossed the Rappahannock, and returned to camp. The loss in the regiment is three commissioned officers killed, and eight wounded; seventeen enlisted men killed, one hundred and twenty-nine wounded, and twenty-seven missing. Some of the latter are known to be wounded, and will likely be found in some of the hospitals, while others are no doubt killed. Among the many whose loss the regiment now mourns, and who deserve mention here, are Adjutant James C. Noon, a brave and faithful soldier, who fell while urging the men to the fatal charge, and Captain John M. Jones and First Lieutenant William A. Scott, both of company F, who were nobly leading their command, and among the foremost, fighting when they fell."

After the battle, the regiment remained at Camp Humphreys, engaged in the usual routine of duty, with the exception of its participation in the fruitless movement of the 20th of January, 1863, until the opening of active operations of the campaign under Hooker. On the 27th of April the movement commenced, the regiment crossing the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, and the Rapidan at Ely's Ford. In the formation to receive the enemy, Humphreys' Division was posted on the extreme left of the line, stretching out towards the Rappahannock, and during Friday and Saturday was busily engaged in entrenching. At daybreak on Sunday, the 3d of May, the regiment was moved hastily towards the centre, and was formed on the first line, near the spot where General Whipple was killed. It subsequently was taken along the United States Ford Road, towards the Chancellor House, where a portion of the army was met falling back. From a position parallel with, and near United States Ford Road, the One Hundred and Thirty-third was quickly moved to a position at right angles with, and the left resting on this road, with a wood in front. Two companies which had been on picket duty, here re-joined the command. With company B thrown forward as skirmishers, the line advanced through the wood, striking detached parties of the enemy, which fell back on his main force, in position about the Chancellor House. As the regiment approached the open ground, the enemy opened upon it with his batteries posted but a short distance in front, and poured in a steady fire of grape and canister. Halting his command, Colonel Speakman sent out a detachment from company A to the right, which returned, reporting the enemy moving with infantry and artillery in that direction. At this juncture the command was ordered by General Humphreys to fall back to the position first occupied, on the outer edge of the woods. Soon afterwards the woods were fired by the enemy's shells, and the regiment was again ordered back, and finally occupied the position of the early morning. Here it remained until the close of the battle. The loss in the engagement was one killed, Adjutant Edward C. Bendere, and nine wounded. With the army the regiment withdrew across the river, in the midst of a heavy rain, and returned to its former camp. Its term of service soon afterwards expired, and returning to Harrisburg on the 19th, just nine months from its departure, was, during the succeeding week, finally mustered out.

One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Regiment.

THIS regiment was recruited in compliance with a call for troops to serve for nine months', issued by Governor Curtin, in July, 1862. Companies A, B, D, and H, were from Lawrence county, C, F, G, and K, from Butler, and E, and I, from Beaver. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were mustered into service, and armed and equipped for duty. The advance of the enemy towards Washington, in the second Bull Run campaign, created consternation at the seat of government, and loud calls for troops were made. This regiment was consequently ordered away before its organization was completed, and departed for Washington on the 20th of August, under command of Captain James M'Cune. On the day following its arrival at the Capital, it was sent to Arlington Heights, where it was attached to a provisional corps, commanded by General Casey. While here the regimental organization was completed, with the following field officers, their commissions bearing date of August 20th: Matthew S. Quay, of Beaver county, Colonel; Edward O'Brien, of Lawrence county, Lieutenant Colonel; John M. Thompson, of Butler county, Major. With the exception of a small number who had served in the Mexican War, and in the three months' service, officers and men were without military experience. While at Arlington Heights, the regiment was engaged in drill and fatigue duty, and was brigaded with the Ninety-first, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth, and One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Pennsylvania regiments, the brigade commanded by General E. B. Tyler. On the 30th the regiment marched out towards the Bull Run battle-ground, but did not arrive in time to participate in the fight, and upon its return was put into the defenses. On the 13th of September it moved from camp, and proceeding to Washington, started on the following day towards South Mountain, in Maryland, where the enemy had made his appearance. At the Monocacy the command halted, and remained until the evening of the 17th, when it was put upon the march, and on the morning of the 18th, after a fatiguing night march, arrived on the battle-field of Antietam. But the fighting had now substantially ended, though a renewal of the contest was momentarily expected, the men standing to arms the whole day. During the succeeding night, the enemy withdrew into Virginia. Until the 30th of October, the regiment lay in camp near the battle-field, where it was engaged in drill. While here, Colonel Quay was stricken down with typhoid fever, and the command devolved on Lieutenant Colonel O'Brien. Upon the return of the army into Virginia, the regiment moved by easy marches until it reached the neighborhood of Fredericksburg, where, on the 22d of November, it went into camp. Early in December, Colonel Quay returned to duty, but so much reduced by disease that he soon after resigned, and Lieutenant Colonel O'Brien was commissioned Colonel, Major Thompson, Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain William H. Shaw, Major.

The movement of the brigade for the battle of Fredericksburg commenced on the 12th, the battle opening on the 13th. Humphreys' Division of the Fifth Corps, to which Tyler's Brigade belonged, was held in reserve on the north bank of the Rappahannock, until near the middle of the afternoon, when it was ordered across, and advanced to the onset. In the formation of the brigade for storming the heights, in the last grand struggle of the day, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth had the post of honor in the brigade, the right of the first line. "As soon as the formation was complete," says General Tyler in his official report, "the order to sound the charge was given, the caution having been previously communicated to the command not to fire a gun until orders were received from me. The brigade moved forward in as good order as the muddy condition of the ground on the left of my line would admit, until we came upon a body of officers and men lying flat upon the ground, in front of the brick house, and along the slight elevation on its right and left. Upon our approach, these officers commanded 'Halt!' flourishing their swords as they lay, while a number of their men endeavored to intimidate our troops, crying out that they would be slaughtered, and the like. An effort was made to get them out of the way, but failed, and we marched over them, and when we were within a very short distance of the enemy's line, a fire was opened on our rear, which wounded a few of our most valuable officers, and, I regret to say, killed some of our men. Instantly the cry ran along the line that we were being fired into from the rear. The command halted, receiving at the same time a terrible fire from the enemy. Orders for the moment were forgotten, and a fire from our whole line was immediately returned. Another cry passed along the line, that we were being fired upon from the rear, when our men, after giving the enemy several volleys, fell back." In speaking of the conduct of Colonel O'Brien in this charge, General Humphreys, who commanded the division, said: "Under my own eye he rode in front of his regiment, and literally led it in the last charge on the stone-wall, at Fredericksburg, just before dark on December 13th." In the brief space in which the regiment was in the conflict, it lost fourteen killed, one hundred and six wounded, and nineteen missing, many of the latter known to be wounded. Lieutenants Hugh Barnes, and Zarah C. Quillen, were among the killed, and Adjutant Alfred G. Reed, mortally wounded. Captains Lyon, Breckenridge, Hague, and M'Cready, and Lieutenants St. Clair, White, Brown, and Millinger, were among the wounded. Major Thompson had his horse shot under him, and was himself wounded. Colonel Quay, though in a feeble state of health,—unwilling that the regiment should go into battle without him,—volunteered as an aid on the staff of General Tyler, and served throughout the battle. General Tyler bears this testimony of his services in his official report: "Colonel M. S. Quay, late of the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, was upon my staff as volunteer aid-de-camp, and to him I am greatly indebted. Notwithstanding his enfeebled health, he was in the saddle early and late, ever prompt and efficient, and especially so during the engagement." During the day of the 14th, the regiment lay in the streets of Fredericksburg, with considerable skirmishing and artillery firing, but no general movement. At midnight of the 15th, it re-crossed the river and returned to camp.

Unwilling to rest content with defeat, General Burnside inaugurated a new campaign on the 20th of January, which was ingloriously cut short by inclement weather, and the sudden deepening of the mud, rendering the movement of artillery and trains next to impossible. The advent of General Hooker to the head of the army, soon afterwards, marked a new era in discipline, by which the morale and health of the troops were vastly improved. On the 27th of April the army moved on the spring campaign, and took position between Chancellorsville and Fredericksburg, Humphreys' Division on the left of the line. Fighting commenced on the 1st of May, and continued for three days, with varying success. On the morning of the 3d, the brigade was led to the menaced part of the field, on the left, and was moved by the left flank to a piece of woods on the Ely's Ford Road. As the column approached the enemy, it was deployed in line of battle, the Ninety-first on the extreme right, with no protection in flank, the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth standing next, on its left. The order to advance was given. In well preserved lines it pressed forward through the woods, driving in the enemy's skirmishers, and soon reaching his line of battle. A heavy fire was at once opened, and for an hour and three-quarters the battle raged with unabated fury. At length the ammunition began to fail, and finding it impossible to obtain more, Colonel O'Brien ordered his men to slacken fire, while the dead and wounded were searched, and a meagre supply obtained. The enemy now began to press in front, and to feel for, and move in upon the unsupported flank. Bayonets were fixed and preparations were made for a charge; but seeing the foe in overpowering numbers, bearing down upon flank and rear, the order was given to retire to the support of the batteries, in the open ground, where a few rounds of grape and canister brought the defiant rebels, swarming at the edge of the woods, to a halt, and sent them back to their cover in rout and confusion. "The One Hundred and Thirty-fourth, Colonel O'Brien," says General Tyler in his official report, "was second in line, and no set of men could have behaved better. The officers, one and all following the example of their Colonel, who was constantly on the alert, were very active, and not a man shirked his duty." The loss in the engagement was forty-eight in killed, wounded, and missing. Captain John Brant was among the killed. After the battle, the regiment returned to its former camp, and a few days thereafter, its term of service having expired, was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 26th of May, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment.

COMPANIES C, E, H, and K, of this regiment, were from Lancaster county, A, D, and I, from Indiana, F, and G, from Westmoreland, and B, from Jefferson. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where a regimental organization was effected on the 19th of August, 1862, with the following field officers: James R. Porter, of Indiana county, Colonel; D. L. M'Culloch, of Westmoreland county, Lieutenant Colonel; Rudolph W. Shenk, of Lancaster county, Major. On the same evening the regiment moved for Washington, and upon its arrival reported to General Wadsworth, in command of the department, who assigned it to provost guard duty, by detachments, in the city and in Georgetown, where it remained until the 16th of February, 1863. In the meantime, the field officers performed special duty, Colonel Porter acting as President of a General Court Martial, Lieutenant Colonel M'Culloch as commandant of Capitol Hill, and Major Shenk as officer in charge of State prisoners, and prisoners of war, while on their way between Washington and Aiken's Landing, for exchange, and subsequently as commandant of the Soldiers' Retreat, in Washington. Colonel Porter made repeated applications to have his regiment sent to the front, but without success. Finally, on the 16th of February, when General Wadsworth joined the Army of the Potomac, the scattered detachments were united, and it proceeded to Belle Plain, where it was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, First Corps, the brigade being for a time under the command of Colonel Porter. Until the opening of the Chancellorsville campaign, it was engaged in guard and picket duty. On the 28th of April, the corps moved up near to the Rappahannock River, at Pollock's Mills, below Fredericksburg. Shortly after dark, Colonel Porter moved his regiment close to the bank, in support of batteries, where he disposed his men as sharp-shooters. On the following morning the enemy opened fire, which was vigorously answered, the regiment losing three wounded. On the 2d of May, the corps marched away to join the army under Hooker, now hotly engaged near Chancellorsville, leaving the regiment still in support of the artillery. Upon being relieved, it hastened forward and re-joined the corps at the front, where it was thrown out to cover the front of the brigade. While upon this duty, it suffered some loss by capture. After the battle, it returned to its camp at Belle Plain, where it remained until the expiration of its term of service. This regiment was composed of good material, and was well officered. General Doubleday, in whose division it served, says of it: "Colonel

Porter has rendered very good service with his regiment in guarding the batteries along the Rappahannock, engaged in covering the crossing of our troops below Fredericksburg. His men defended the guns against the enemy's sharpshooters handsomely, and did good execution. * * * The One Hundred and Thirty-fifth also covered the front of the First Brigade of my division, at the battle of Chancellorsville, and although not actively engaged, did all that was required of it." On being relieved at the front, it returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 24th of May, it was mustered out of service.

One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Regiment.

FOUR companies of this regiment, E, F, G, and H, were recruited in Allegheny county, A, and D, in Tioga, B, was recruited in Luzerne and Tioga, C, in Dauphin, I, in Crawford, Centre, and Columbia, and K, in Cambria. A regimental organization was effected at Camp Curtin, on the 20th of August, 1862, by the choice of the following field officers: Thomas M. Bayne, of Allegheny county, Colonel; Isaac Wright, of Allegheny county, Lieutenant Colonel; Charles Ryan, of Tioga county, Major. On the 29th, the regiment was ordered to Washington, arriving in the midst of the Bull Run battle, and was at once sent to Fort Lincoln, forming a link in the cordon of the defenses of the Capital. After the conclusion of the battle, the command was posted in detachments along the defenses, to the north and west of the city, and was employed in guard duty and in strengthening the fortifications. While here, a detachment of ax-men, amounting to about two regiments, was sent out under Major Ryan, to fell the timber on a belt of two miles outside the fortifications, in order to give full play to the artillery, in case the enemy approached.

On the 27th of September, ten days after the battle of Antietam, the regiment was assembled in camp near Chain Bridge, and two days thereafter moved into Washington and took cars for Frederick, Maryland, where, upon its arrival, it reported to General Paul. Two weeks later it moved to Sharpsburg, crossing on the way that part of the Antietam field where the veterans of Hooker fought, and upon its arrival, was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the First Corps, under command of General Ricketts. The brigade was composed of the Ninetieth, and One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Pennsylvania, Twenty-sixth New York, and the Twelfth Massachusetts, and upon the promotion of General Ricketts to the command of the division, Colonel Lyle, of the Ninetieth, succeeded him. On the occasion of the rebel raid upon Chambersburg, under Stuart and Hampton, on the 10th of October, the camp was thrown into commotion, and unusual vigilance was exercised, a rebel scout bearing dispatches to rebels at Frederick, being captured. While remaining in Maryland, the time was spent in picketing along the river, and in drill. After crossing into Virginia, when the army moved southward, the regiment was in camp for a few days at Warrenton, and subsequently at Brooks' Station, White Oak Church, and finally near Falmouth.

In the battle of Fredericksburg, the First Corps formed part of Franklin's Grand Division, and bore the brunt of the fighting on the left of the line. The division to which the regiment belonged, now commanded by General Gibbon, was formed on the right of the Pennsylvania Reserves, under Meade.

who took the initiative in the battle. Meade's attack at first proved successful, but being too weak to hold his advantage, he was soon obliged to give ground, and Gibbon was hurried forward to his support. The position of the regiment had been in support of the Fifth Maine Battery, posted near the Stone House. As the brigade moved out to the attack, it soon came under a hot fire of musketry from a defiant foe, who was rapidly driven back across the railroad, with great slaughter. A single division battling against the rapidly concentrating forces of the enemy, presented a grand spectacle of courage; but to continue the unequal contest was only to entail a useless slaughter, and the order to fall back was given. At the original position near the Stone House, the command re-formed, and held the ground until the close of the battle. The loss of the regiment in the engagement was one hundred and forty in killed, wounded, and missing. Captain Asa Chapman was killed, and Captain S. S. Marchand, received a mortal wound.

After the return of the army to the north bank, the regiment occupied its old quarters, engaged in the usual camp and picket duty—with the exception of the few days in January, 1863, when it was out upon the Mud March—until the opening of the spring campaign under Hooker. On the morning of the 28th of April, the corps moved out to a position near the river, opposite Franklin's Crossing, while the main body marched up, and passing the Rappahannock and the Rapidan at the upper fords, took position at Chancellorsville, in the enemy's rear. On the 30th, the corps lay in columns of brigade, closed in mass, exposed to rebel artillery fire. At four in the afternoon, having brought his guns to bear upon the position, the enemy opened, throwing his missiles into the ranks of the One Hundred and Thirty-sixth, killing and wounding several of the men; Lieutenant Alfred C. Lindsay, being among the mortally wounded. A change of position was immediately ordered, and the regiment fell back to a deep ditch by the side of the road, where it took shelter and remained, still under fire, until the close of the day. At night-fall it was ordered out to take up one of the pontoon bridges and escort the train bearing it, to United States Ford. By ten o'clock the boats were all up and the train ready to start. All night long it moved toilsomely on, and at daybreak of the following morning, was relieved and allowed to rest. At evening of the 2d, the corps crossed and encamped near the stream; but at nine at night it was aroused and ordered to move rapidly to the front, the Eleventh Corps having been routed, and the army being in confusion. It was moved into position on the extreme right, stretching out towards the Rapidan, the brigade joining Roy Stone's Bucktails on the left, and General Paul's Brigade on the right, with the Fifth Maine Battery in the centre. Breast-works were hastily thrown up, and on the following morning a detachment, embracing about half of the regiment, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Wright, was sent out upon picket, between the two lines of battle. Towards evening the enemy in considerable force made a dash upon this detachment, and succeeded in driving it in. The ground was subsequently re-taken and the picket line re-established. On the following day the enemy again attacked, but the Union forces were well intrenched, and gave him a bloody repulse. On the night of the 5th of May, the army withdrew across the river, the brigade returning to its former camping ground. At the conclusion of its term of service, the regiment returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 29th, it was mustered out.

One Hundred and Thirty-Seventh Regiment.

COMPANY A, of this regiment, was recruited principally in Wayne county, B, in Crawford, companies C, E, and H, in Clinton, D, F, and G, in Butler, company I, in Bradford, and K, in Schuylkill. The men rendezvoused by squads and companies, at Camp Curtin, and on the 25th of August, 1862, a regimental organization was effected, by the choice of the following field officers: Henry M. Bossert, of Clinton county, Colonel; Joseph B. Kiddoo, of Allegheny county, Lieutenant Colonel; Charles W. Wingard, of Clinton county, Major. With the exception of a small number of officers and men who had served in the militia, and in the three months' service, and Lieutenant Colonel Kiddoo, who had made the Peninsula campaign under M'Clellan, as a private, all were wanting in military experience. Soon after its organization, the regiment was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival, reported to General Casey. It went into camp near the city, and during its stay the companies were drilled by officers from the neighboring forts. On the 31st, it was assigned to General Hancock's Brigade, Smith's Division, Sixth Corps, then marching through Washington, after the defeat at Bull Run, and about to enter on the Maryland campaign. At Crampton's Gap, in the South Mountain, the corps came up with the enemy, and the regiment was here for the first time under fire, though not in the front line. The Pass was carried without its active participation, though the men were eager for the fray, and bore themselves, though almost entirely destitute of knowledge in military duty, with commendable coolness. After crossing the mountain, Colonel Bossert was ordered with a detachment from the different regiments of the brigade, to proceed in the direction of Harper's Ferry, and establish a line across the valley to guard against surprise from that direction. The rest of the regiment was assigned to the charge of the wagon train. As the battle of Antietam opened, Colonel Bossert drew in his detachment and re-joined the brigade on the field. The Colonel, with company I, was sent to the support of the brigade battery, and by his coolness under fire, won the thanks of the commander of the brigade. The main body of the regiment was held in reserve, and after the battle, assisted in burying the dead. It was then ordered to stay at Dam No. 4, on the Potomac, where it was engaged in guard duty, and battalion drill. When Stuart with his rebel cavalry made his raid into Pennsylvania, the brigade, then commanded by General Pratt, was sent in pursuit. The men were aroused at midnight and put upon the march, and no halt was called until they were far into Pennsylvania. The pursuit was fruitless, and the command went into camp a few miles from Hagerstown, near the State line. Near the close of October, when the army returned into Virginia, the regiment was ordered to the defenses of Washington, and was encamped to the south of the east branch of the Potomac, with other new regiments. An excellent opportunity was here given for drill and discipline, which was studiously improved.

When the army reached Fredericksburg, under command of General Burnside, the regiment was again ordered to the field, and marching down to a point opposite Acquia Creek, crossed the river. Here Colonel Bossert was placed in command of the post, with a brigade, composed of his own regiment, four regiments of New Jersey troops, and one from New York, and was charged with guarding the landing, and the railroad leading to Fredericksburg. The regiment remained on duty here, until Burnside opened his second campaign on the 20th of January, 1863, when it was ordered to the front, and assigned to the Third Brigade, First Division, First Army Corps, General Paul commanding the brigade, and Wadsworth the division. Upon the abandonment of this campaign, it went into camp at Belle Plain, where it became well versed in drill and picket duty. On the 14th of March, Colonel Bossert was honorably discharged, and Lieutenant Colonel Kiddoo was promoted to succeed him, Major Wingard, to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain De Los Walker, to Major.

In the campaign under Hooker, which opened on the 27th of April, the regiment moved out with the corps, and crossing the Rappahannock at Franklin's Crossing, under a heavy artillery fire, took position on the south bank, and built temporary earth-works. It remained in this position, under a violent fire of the enemy's artillery, until the night of the 1st of May, when the corps was ordered away to Chancellorsville, where the main body of the army was in position, and where the premonitions of hard fighting were strongly marked. Accordingly, it re-crossed the river, marched to United States Ford, passed the stream, and after having just encamped for the night near its banks, was suddenly aroused and moved to the front, on the extreme right of the line, the Eleventh Corps having in the meantime been routed by the powerful army of Stonewall Jackson. The position of the brigade was on the right of the corps, and the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh on the right of the brigade. There was no serious fighting in its front, and three days after it returned with the army and occupied its former camp. About the middle of May, the term of enlistment being about to expire, it was ordered to Harrisburg, where, on the 1st of June, it was finally mustered out of service.

UNASSIGNED MAN.

Ferree, Lake B	Private	April, 1863,	Deserted—dishonorably discharged, May 12, 1865.

One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Regiment.*

RECRUITING was commenced for the companies which ultimately composed this regiment, under the call for nine months' service, but before it was completed, an order was issued forbidding the acceptance of more men for a less period than three years, and the terms of enlistment were accordingly changed to three years. Companies A, C, I, and K, were recruited in Montgomery county, B, and G, in Adams, D, E, and F, in Bedford, and company H, in Bucks. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, the first company arriving on the 16th of August, 1862, and by the 26th their organizations were completed, and they were mustered into the United States service. Charles L. K. Sumwalt, of Adams county, was appointed Colonel, and under his command, on the 30th, it moved to Baltimore. It reported to General Wool, in command of the Middle Department, and was by him ordered to duty at the Relay House, the Washington Junction of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Shortly after its arrival, Captain M. R. M'Clennan, of company A, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Lewis A. May, of company F, Major. It was employed in guarding the railroad, to prevent mischief by secession sympathizers, and to prevent any interruption of communication with the Capital. For this purpose, company A was stationed at Jessop's Cut, C, at Dorsey's Switch, E, at Hanover Switch, D, at Elk Ridge Landing, G, at Fort Dix, a small earth-work mounting six guns, commanding the Washington Viaduct, a handsome stone structure spanning the Patapsco River, B, at Ellicott's Mills, a detachment of I, at Elysville, and the remaining four companies, F, H, I, and K, at head-quarters, near the Relay House. This was the original disposition, and the relative strength remained the same, though the companies were periodically changed to give all an opportunity for regimental drill. During the time of the Maryland campaign, which culminated in the battle of Antietam, this road was the scene of great activity, and the force at this point was strengthened by the addition of the One Hundred and Eighteenth New York, and battery B, of the Fifth New York Light Artillery. After the campaign was ended, the regiment was again left to perform the duty alone. Many deserters and stragglers from the Union army, and aiders and abettors of the enemy, were arrested and committed. The winter and spring of 1862–3, passed with little to change the regular routine of duty. On the 2d of May, Lieutenant Colonel M'Clennan was promoted to Colonel, in place of Colonel Sumwalt, whose connection with the service was severed on 30th of March preceding.

On the 16th of June, the regiment was ordered to active duty, and proceeded to Harper's Ferry, where it was assigned to Elliott's Brigade, a part of the command with which Milroy had in vain battled with the advancing columns of Lee's Army, at Winchester, on their way to Pennsylvania. General French was in command at Harper's Ferry, with the brigades of Kenly, Morris, and Elliott, under him. The Heights were strongly fortified, the trees in front were swept away, artillery was advantageously posted, strong picket lines were established, and every precaution taken to give the foe a warm reception. But he wisely shunned this route, his bivouac fires, and his long trains visible in the distant valley, as they passed, and crossed the Potomac at Williamsport. Harper's Ferry was evacuated on the 1st of July. All munitions and stores that could not be removed were destroyed, and the remainder was loaded on canal-boats, and sent to Washington. Elliott's Brigade was charged with guarding it, and taking it through, the rest of French's Division moving to Frederick. From Washington, the brigade proceeded by rail, on the 7th, to Frederick, and re-joined the division, and on the following day joined the army in its pursuit of Lee, now fresh from the field of Gettysburg. General French assumed command of the Third Corps, in place of Sickles, who had fallen in the desperate fighting of the 2d, and General Elliott succeeded the former in command of the division, now attached to that corps. On the 16th, the corps crossed the river at Harper's Ferry, and on the 23d, encountered the enemy in a strong position at Wapping Heights, his infantry, screened by stone walls, making a determined resistance. He was finally dislodged by a gallant charge of the Excelsior Brigade, and was driven into the valley beyond. Elliott's Brigade did not become engaged, though held under fire a considerable portion of the time during the engagement. At Warrenton the corps halted, and remained until the 1st of August, when it moved out to the Rappahannock, the regiment being posted at Fox's Ford, charged with out-post duty. On the 15th of September, the corps moved on to Warrenton, where it remained in comparative quiet, with the rest of the army, for nearly six weeks. In the meantime, two corps, the Eleventh and Twelfth, had been detached from the army of the Potomac, and sent to the support of Rosecrans, cooped up in a precarious condition at Chattanooga. Feeling that he could now with safety assume the offensive, Lee commenced a sudden flank movement by the right, and Meade, to save himself, retreated to Centreville. In this movement, the regiment was divided, a portion being assigned as guard to the ammunition train, and the remainder to the corps ambulances. At Centreville, the movement of the two armies was reversed, without coming into conflict, and Lee retreated, and Meade pursued. On the 23d of October, the regiment was relieved from guard duty with the trains, and re-joined its brigade. After crossing the Rappahannock, and when within two and a-half miles of Brandy Station, the enemy's rear guard was encountered. Elliott's Division had that day the advance, and the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, and the One Hundred and Tenth Ohio, were immediately deployed, the former to the left and the latter to the right of the railroad, and with Berdan's Sharp-shooters, and company A, of the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth, thrown forward as skirmishers, advanced with supporting regiments to the attack. The fire of the enemy's artillery was severe. Early in the engagement, a shell struck and exploded in the ranks near the centre of the regiment, mortally wounding Captain Lazarus C. Andress, and carrying away the left arm of Sergeant Abraham G. Rapp. The missile burst as it struck the former, fearfully mangling his hip and thigh, and shivering his sword. The hill was carried, and the enemy barely escaped with his artillery. The loss was seven wounded.

At Brandy Station the army halted, and remained until the 23d of November, when it set forward on the Mine Run Campaign. The Third Corps crossed the Rapidan at Jacob's Ford, and on the 27th came up with the enemy at Locust Grove. The Second Division was first engaged, and being hard pressed, the Third, now commanded by General Carr, was sent to its support, and formed on its left, the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth being on the extreme left of the line. The fighting soon opened on its front, at close range, and buck and ball were hurled with telling effect against the advancing enemy. Colonel M'Clennan, while moving along the line encouraging his men, and directing the fight, was stricken down and carried from the field. Captain Fisher had an arm shattered, and Adjutant Cress, was disabled. At dark, after having gallantly held the ground, and repulsed repeated charges, inflicting great slaughter, it was relieved by fresh troops, and rested for the night on the field. The loss in the engagement was seven killed, forty-five wounded, and three missing. During the night, the enemy withdrew to his fortified position behind Mine Run. After advancing to, and reconnoitring his ground, it was decided to abandon the campaign, and the army returned to camp near Brandy Station, where the regiment was soon settled in comfortable winter-quarters.

Colonel M'Clennan having measurably recovered from his wounds, returned to duty on the 13th of March, 1864, and was received in camp with demonstrations of warm regard. The smooth bore muskets with which the regiment was armed, were soon afterwards exchanged for Springfield rifled muskets. In the re-organization of the corps, preparatory to the opening of the spring campaign, the Third Division of the Third Corps, became the Third Division of the Sixth, General Ricketts in command. The army moved on the 3d of May, and on the 5th, soon after crossing the Rapidan, it was attacked in the tangled thickets of the Wilderness. It was near midday before Ricketts' Division was put in motion. Towards evening, after having marched and counter-marched, the brigade, to the command of which General Truman Seymour had that morning been assigned, was detached, and hurriedly led to a position on the extreme right of the corps, passing on its way the scene of a most sanguinary struggle, where the dead of both armies were thickly strewn on the wild wooded battle-field. At dark it was formed in two lines, the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth on the second line. It was thought that only a picket guard of the enemy's extreme left was in front, and in swinging around to envelop it, the command was suddenly brought under a severe front and flank fire, from strong columns For two hours, with the most stubborn fighting, the ground was held, when on both sides the firing gradually died away, and the lines rested on the field where they had fought. The casualties in the regiment were slight, Sergeant Biesecker, and John H. Ashenfelter, of the color-guard, being killed. All night long the moans and cries of the dying filled the air, and the ominous sounds of the enemy chopping and fortifying in front, and far out on the right flank, were distinctly heard. General Seymour was apprised of these threatening indications, but the order of the previous evening to renew the assault in the morning, was not modified, and at nine o'clock the brigade moved to the desperate work, and now the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth on the front line. The men were charged not to fire a shot until they had reached the enemy's works. Apprised by the clanking of arms, of their approach, he was ready to receive them. The pattering fire of his skirmishers deepened into showers, as they went, and finally a perfect storm of deadly missiles greeted them; but without wavering, the lines moved on, until within fifty yards of his breast-works, where the flash of his guns was plainly visible through the tangled wood. And now, when the moment for a final dash had come, impatient soldiers began to stop and to fire. Felled trees and tangled branches made it more and more difficult to advance. The momentum of the charge was lost, and the men taking shelter behind trees, and lying prostrate upon the ground, for an hour, in the face of a most destructive fire of infantry and artillery hurling grape and canister, held their ground. Seeing that there was no hope of success, the brigade was finally ordered back to the position of the morning, unavoidably leaving many of the dead and wounded on the field. Late in the evening, while the men were preparing their coffee behind their hastily constructed breast-works, Shaler's Brigade, which had been posted upon the right of Seymour, was suddenly attacked, in flank and rear, by a powerful body of the enemy under Gordon. Sweeping down upon the unsuspecting troops, as did Jackson upon the Eleventh Corps, at Chancellorsville, Gordon scattered and drove all opposed to him. He was finally checked by reinforcements from other parts of the line, and the lost ground re-gained. Generals Shaler and Seymour, with numbers of their troops, were taken prisoners. Weakened by two fatal and unsuccessful charges, the brigade was in no condition or heart to resist, and the General who had refused to listen to the representations of danger in the early morning, added another to the misfortunes which had attended his career at Charles City Cross Roads, Fort Wagner, and Olustee. The regiment lost in these engagements twenty-seven killed, ninety-four wounded, and thirty-five missing, of whom twenty-six were known to be prisoners. Lieutenant John H. Fisher was killed, and Lieutenants H. C. Grossman, and John E. Essick were wounded, the latter mortally.

On the 7th, the contending parties acted on the defensive, operations being confined to skirmishing. On the night of the 8th, the first of Grant's movements by the left flank began. In the fierce fighting which occurred about Spottsylvania, and in the subsequent movements during the month of May, the regiment shared, and was frequently under fire, losing five wounded on the 12th, three wounded on the 13th, one killed on the 18th, one wounded on the 19th, two wounded on the 20th, and one wounded on the 31st, but did not become involved in the more desperate fighting.

On the 1st of June, the troops from Butler's Army of the James were met in the vicinity of Cold Harbor, and orders were given to prepare for an engagement. "A hasty disposition of these commands was made," says Lieutenant Lewis in his narrative of this regiment, "skirmishers were advanced, the enemy's position partially developed, a plan of assault selected, and at five o'clock the attack was commenced. The Third Division, on the right of the corps, adjoining General Smith's left, moved forward in four lines of battle, and with great promptness. The front line of the Second Brigade consisted of the Sixth Maryland, and the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Pennsylvania, and these two regiments were the first to encounter a galling fire from the enemy's sharp-shooters, and a difficult swamp which had to be crossed. These obstacles overcome, the rebel main line, situated on a ridge thickly wooded with pine, was found defended by strong numbers. The Sixth, and the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth, were the first troops to clamber the works and break the rebel front, which was only accomplished by a solid rush and hard fighting. The confusion and flight of the enemy resulting from this breach in his line, was quickly followed up, and in a short time the two above specified regiments had captured more prisoners than their own numbers. On other portions of the line our troops had not carried the works, and we, in our zeal to drive the enemy, soon distanced all supporting columns, to the jeopardy of our own safety. At one period the men of our regiment drove the gunners from a battery; but when within a few yards of its position, and about to seize it, our scattered and weakened numbers became apparent to the enemy, who rallied heavily against us, returned to his guns, and checked our further advance by a raking charge of canister. We were hard pressed, but the captured ground was maintained. The entire Third Division joined in the work with alacrity, at the first onset, and to this command belongs the credit of being the only division of two corps to successfully accomplish the task assigned it in this battle." The conduct of the division drew from General Meade a congratulatory order, in these words: "Please give my thanks to Brigadier General Ricketts and his gallant command, for the very handsome manner in which they conducted themselves to-day. The success attained by them is of great importance, and if promptly followed up will materially advance our operations." During the night the lines were re-formed, and the rebel works were reversed. On the 3d another assault was made, but without success, and the two armies fell to digging, which was continued until the 12th, when the Union army was quietly withdrawn, and moved off towards the James. The loss was seven killed, fifty-four wounded, and seven missing. Lieutenant Charles P. M'Laughlin was among the killed.

After crossing the James, about the middle of the month, the Third Division moved up to Point of Rocks, and was assigned a position in the trenches at Bermuda Hundred, but subsequently re-joined the corps in front of Petersburg, and near the close of the month, joined in the movement upon the Weldon Railroad, at Ream's Station, in which several miles of the road were destroyed.

On the 6th of July, Ricketts' Division was ordered to City Point, and thence moved by transport to Baltimore. Cars were in waiting, upon which it immediately proceeded to Monocacy, and there awaited the advance of the enemy under Early, who, with a powerful division of Lee's army, was advancing on Washington. Line of battle was hastily formed, the troops of General Wallace, who commanded the department, occupying the right, which rested on a high fortified bluff overlooking the railroad and Monocacy Creek, and Ricketts' Division, drawn up in two lines, the left, the whole in crescent shape, stretching across the railroad and the Washington Turnpike. By ten, on the morning of the 9th, the skirmishing was brisk, and it soon became evident that the Union force was vastly outnumbered. To equal his front, Ricketts' Division was stretched out in a single thin line, and against this the enemy came on in heavy force, rejoicing in his strength, and confident of victory. The One Hundred and Thirty-eighth occupied a position on the unprotected left flank. To prevent this from being turned, which seemed to be the object of the enemy, the line was refused until it became impossible for him to execute his purpose, without dividing his force. Foiled in this, he made a direct assault in three lines. As soon as he came within range, a well directed fire was opened, and rapid rounds were poured in with admirable effect. His first and second lines were broken, and the third advanced in their places; but still the division held its ground. At five P. M., the troops on the right gave way, and Ricketts was compelled to order a retreat to save himself from capture. The enemy was well supplied with artillery, which was admirably handled, while upon the Union side, the few guns in play did little execution. Colonel M'Clennan commanded the brigade, during the engagement, and Major May, the regiment. The loss was thirty-nine men wounded, twenty-one captured, and eight missing. Captain George W. Guss was among the wounded, and Captain Richard T. Stewart among the prisoners. The division retired to Baltimore, and encamped at Druid Hill Park, and Early pushed on towards Washington; but here he was met by the rest of the Sixth Corps, and driven ingloriously into Virginia. The Union forces joined in pursuit, and pushed him to beyond Berryville, in the Shenandoah Valley, Ricketts' Division having in the meantime re-joined the corps. And now, for a period of nearly a month, during the intense heat of the season, marches and counter-marches between Washington and the Shenandoah Valley, over the soil of Maryland and Virginia, followed, apparently to little purpose.

Finally a new department was created, and General Sheridan assigned to its command. His army was composed of the Sixth, Eighth, and Nineteenth corps, with a force of cavalry sent from the army of the Potomac. Manœuvring at once commenced, by which the enemy was drawn from his stronghold at Fisher's Hill. On the 29th of August, the cavalry, under Merritt, supported by Ricketts' Division, met and defeated a body of the enemy near Smithfield. Encouraged by this success, at two A. M., on the morning of the 19th of September, Sheridan moved from his camp at Berryville, to attack Early resting on the line of the Opequan, six miles away. By daylight the stream was crossed, and dispositions were at once made for attack. The One Hundred and Thirty-eighth occupied the first line in the brigade, with the Sixth Maryland, and Sixty-seventh Pennsylvania on its right and left. The first attack was made by the Sixth and Nineteenth corps, in which a decided advantage was gained, but was lost by a fatal gap between the two corps, which, widening as they advanced, allowed the enemy to break through. Some confusion resulted; but the command was soon rallied, when the grand advance was made, and under a terrific fire of musketry and artillery, it swept forward full upon his front, and at every point was victorious, the enemy retreating in precipitation and confusion. The pursuit was continued to Fisher's Hill, where he was found prepared to offer formidable resistance. Ricketts' Division occupied a position in front of a strong rebel earth-work, on the extreme right of the line, and when the Eighth Corps, under Crook, had, by a mountain path turned that flank, the whole line moved simultaneously upon the enemy, and again drove him in utter rout, making extensive captures of prisoners, guns, and small arms. The loss of the regiment in these engagements was four killed, thirty-nine wounded, and three missing. The army now moved on in pursuit, in three columns, preceded by a line of skirmishers, of which the regiment formed part, and in a rencounter near New Market with his rear guard, suffered some loss in wounded. At Harrisonburg the pursuit was stayed, and the army soon after returned, and went into camp at Cedar Creek, the enemy returning subsequently with reinforcements, and taking position in his favorite stronghold at Fisher's Hill.

A little after midnight of the 18th of October, the rebel army was led from its camp, and stealthily approaching the Union camp, at day-break, turned the left of the line where the Eighth Corps lay, and taking it in reverse, swept it back, the rout soon communicating to the Nineteenth Corps, which stood next. The Sixth Corps had time to rally, and offered some resistance, but was finally withdrawn to Middletown, where a new line was taken up, and the corps effectively rallied. Here, Sheridan, who had been absent in the early part of the day, joined them, and a general advance was sounded. The One Hundred and Thirty-eighth held manfully its place in the severe conflict which followed, and shared in the glorious victory which resulted. The loss was two killed and forty wounded. Lieutenants Samuel W. Cloward, John A. Gump, William B. Lovett, and Martin S. Bortz were among the wounded, the two former mortally. At the opening of this campaign Colonel M'Clennan, debilitated by sickness, was obliged to leave the command, and the regiment was led throughout by Major May. On the 2d of November, the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth, with other troops, was taken to Philadelphia, where it remained in camp until the 11th, when it returned to the army now in camp near Winchester.

Early in December, the corps returned to its place in the army before Petersburg, taking position between the Ninth and Second corps, vacated by the Fifth. The One Hundred and Thirty-eighth was detailed to garrison Fort Dushane, an earthwork on the rear line of defenses near the Weldon Railroad. At Christmas a bountiful repast was provided by friends of the regiment in Montgomery county, and a beautiful stand of colors was presented, a gift from "Loyal citizens of Norristown and Bridgeport, Pa." In acknowledgment of the latter gift, an elaborate address, breathing intense devotion to the national cause, was prepared and sent to the donors.

At midnight on the 1st of April, the regiment joined the corps, and took position in the third line, a general assault having been ordered along the whole front upon the enemy's works. At four o'clock on the morning of the 2d, the signal for the advance was given, and moving forward under a raking musketry, and an enfilading artillery fire, through tangled underwood and ditches, the Sixth Corps carried the works in its front, sweeping everything before it. Pursuit of the flying foe was immediately given, the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth following up in a north-westerly direction for nearly two miles, making numerous captures.* Returning to the point where it first crossed the rebel works, it participated in the charge upon the rebel fort last taken by the division, suffering some loss. The losses in the operations of the entire day were sixteen wounded, Captain James B. Heebner and Lieutenant J. P. Iredell being of the number. Immediate pursuit was commenced, and at Sailor's Creek the corps came up with his main body drawn up on a commanding position beyond the stream. Crossing this, and the marshy bottom through which it courses, the First and Third divisions assaulted in the face of a galling fire, and routed the foe, capturing prisoners in excess of their own numbers. The loss of the regiment was three killed and seven wounded, and here its fighting ended. Three days thereafter Lee surrendered, and the event was celebrated with every demonstration of rejoicing through all the camps. Two weeks later the corps made a forced march of a hundred miles to Danville, to the support of Sherman. But its co-operation was not needed, and it returned to Richmond by rail, and thence marched to the neighborhood of Washington, where on the 23d of June it was mustered out of service.

* "Two men of company F penetrated the country as far as the South Side Railroad, and tore up some of the track. While engaged in this work they encountered two rebel mounted officers who demanded their surrender. Corporal John W. Mauk immediately shot one of the officers, and private Wolford fired at the other, but missed and the rebel escaped. The men then came back to the regiment and reported their adventure. It is supposed that the officer killed by Corporal Mauk was the rebel General A. P. Hill, as various reports give the circumstances of his death as similar to those of this case."—Colonel M'Clennan's Official Report.

One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Regiment.

COMPANIES D, G, I, and K of this regiment were recruited in Allegheny county, B and C in Armstrong, E and F in Allegheny and Armstrong, A in Mercer, and H in Beaver and Allegheny. It was organized at the place of rendezvous, Camp Howe, near the city of Pittsburg, on the 1st of September, 1862, at a moment when the smoke from the disastrous field of Bull Run hung in gloom over the Union army, and reinforcements were sorely needed. The following were the field officers: Frederick H. Collier, Colonel; James D. Owens, Lieutenant Colonel; William H. Moody, Major.

It was immediately ordered to the front, departing on the evening of the 1st, receiving arms at Harrisburg on the 2d, and arriving at Washington on the 3d. The dead in the battle of Bull Run were still unburied, and this regiment was sent to the field under flag of truce to perform the mournful duty of consigning them to the earth. For three days it was incessantly employed. Several days had now elapsed since the dead had fallen, the battle having commenced on the 27th of August, and the corpses exposed to a summer sun were in a loathsome condition. Very few of the rebel dead had been left unburied, but the Union soldiers lay as they fell, scattered over all the field in every conceivable position. Many had been robbed of hats, coats, and shoes, and in many instances stripped entirely naked. One thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine Union soldiers were committed to graves, the best, in view of their condition, that could be given them. This duty ended, the regiment hastened forward after the army, coming up with it on the 17th of September, the day of the battle of Antietam, and was at once put in line but did not become engaged. On the following day, the enemy having retreated, it was pushed forward to the Potomac, participating in a skirmish near Williamsport. Upon its incorporation with the army, it was assigned to the Third Brigade, Third Division of the Sixth Corps, where it was associated with the Ninety-third, Ninety-eighth, and One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania, and the Sixty-second New York.

In the battle of Fredericksburg, fought on the 13th of December, the Sixth Corps, commanded by General Smith, formed part of General Franklin's Grand Division, but was held in reserve near the river bank while the fighting was in progress, and beyond being under a heavy artillery fire was not engaged. The regiment lost thirteen wounded, the effect of the enemy's shells.

In the Chancellorsville campaign it was made the duty of the Sixth Corps, here led by General Sedgwick, to cross the Rappahannock below Fredericksburg and drive the enemy from the heights, while the main body of the army under Hooker, moved above and came in upon the rebel flank. The brigade, commanded by General Wheaton, crossed the river at eight P. M., of the 2d of May. "At twelve P. M.," says General Wheaton in his official report, "the division marched from its bivouac on the south side of the Rappahannock towards Fredericksburg, this brigade following the First. Just before daylight we reached the enemy's works upon the heights, and when ordered by General Newton to feel them and learn something of the nature of their defenses, force, number of guns, &c., I selected the Sixty-second New York and One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania, and forming them in line just below the crest, marched up to draw the enemy's fire. Before the regiments were two hundred yards from the brigade line, they were opened on by a heavy musketry fire, and apparently five pieces of artillery from the rebel works and rifle-pits not two hundred and fifty yards distant, and compelled to fall back a few yards to a line where the slopes afforded them some protection from the enemy's fire, which position they held until the heights were taken. The remaining three regiments of my brigade were then marched forward on a line with, and to the left of the two above mentioned, and formed the first line of battle. * * * At about noon the heights in our front were assaulted on the extreme right by the Light Brigade, and as soon as they were carried, my own regiments and all I could find in their vicinity were moved up at double quick to the support of the attacking column, and to hold the heights." When possession of the ground was assured, the troops were formed in two lines, Wheaton's Brigade in advance, the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth being the first regiment on the left of the main road. When arrived on the main ridge one and a half miles out, the two other divisions came up, and when re-formed again advanced to Salem Church, where the enemy was found in strong position. The One Hundred and Thirty-ninth was at first posted in support of a battery, but soon followed where the Ninety-Third and One Hundred and Second were desperately engaged. For some time an unequal contest was maintained, and the enemy, who had come in upon the rear by a ravine, were driven back by the well directed fire of these regiments. They were finally obliged to retire, and took position in support of batteries. On the following day the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth occupied an important position on the front line, and could not be relieved when the rest of the brigade at night retired to the junction of the Main and Banks' Ford Roads. The enemy having moved a heavy force around upon the flank of the corps in the direction of Fredericksburg, it was obliged to retire towards Banks' Ford, the enemy following up and contesting every rood with great daring. Finally, on the night of Monday, the 4th, the division re-crossed the river on the pontoons which had been previously laid to ensure its safety, and encamped a mile and a half back. In few battles have troops suffered more severely than did Wheaton's Brigade in this. The One Hundred and Thirty-ninth lost one hundred and twenty-three in killed, wounded, and missing. Captain John C. Dempsey, and Lieutenant James T. Harbison, were of the killed, and Sergeant Frederick E. Dake lost his right arm.

On the 8th of June, the Sixth Corps again crossed the Rappahannock at Franklin's Crossing, and was busily engaged in fortifying. The enemy gave no attention to this movement, but soon afterwards started for a grand campaign on northern soil. At Gettysburg, on the 1st of July, he met the advance of the Union army, and the great battle was at once opened. At eight o'clock that evening, the Sixth Corps was resting thirty miles away, when it was first apprised of the fighting at Gettysburg, and received orders to proceed with all dispatch to the field of carnage. Wheaton's Brigade arrived on the afternoon of the 2d, and was at once ordered to the support of the Third and Fifth Corps. Forming with the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth on the extreme left of the line, the brigade swept across the open ground to the right of Little Round Top, and over the rugged wooded knoll to the right of the road leading over to the Peach Orchard. Here it took up a position which it held, checking the enemy in every attempt to penetrate the Union lines. On the following day it was withdrawn a short distance, where it remained until the close of the battle. Captain Jeremiah M. Sample was mortally wounded in this engagement. "He was an old man," says Colonel Collier, "when he went into the service. His father was a soldier of the war of 1812. A nobler old man never died for his country."

In the campaign which was inaugurated after the two armies had returned to the valley of Virginia, the regiment participated, taking part in the brilliant affair at Rappahannock Station, and in the preliminaries to the contemplated assault upon the enemy's works at Mine Run. Upon the abandonment of offensive operations, it went into camp near Brandy Station. Near the close of the year 1863, Wheaton's Brigade was detached from the Army of the Potomac, and ordered to Harper's Ferry. The weather was unusual for severity, even at that season, and the journey, made upon box cars without fire, was attended with great suffering. After crossing the Potomac, and advancing to Halltown, the brigade was ordered back, and went into permanent quarters at Harper's Ferry. About the middle of March, 1864, it returned and re-joined the corps at Brandy Station, where it was transferred from the Third to the Second Division.

A number of recruits were added to the regiment during the winter, and when the corps moved from winter-quarters for the spring campaign in the Wilderness, it presented an array of nearly its original strength. The Second Division was separated from the rest of the corps, soon after crossing the Rapidan, and was ordered to take position at the junction of the Brock and Plank roads, four miles east of Parker's Store, and to hold it until the Second Corps could return from its march southward of the early morning. While moving forward through the dense thickets, this division was suddenly attacked. The One Hundred and Thirty-ninth was on the front line, and with the Ninety-first received the first fire. It was promptly returned, and the enemy driven. The fighting during the afternoon was very severe, but a breast-work thrown up along the Brock Road, proved an impassable barrier, and the fierce assaults of Longstreet's Corps, on the following day, were repulsed with immense slaughter. The regiment lost in killed and wounded one hundred and ninety-six, including nearly every commissioned officer. Major Abraham H. Snyder, and Lieutenant Ephraim C. Grace, were among the killed. Major Snyder was mounted, acting as Lieutenant Colonel, and was urging on his men, when he was struck by a rebel bullet directly in the forehead, and killed instantly.

In the operations about Spottsylvania Court House, which lasted from the 8th to the 21st, the regiment bore a part, being almost constantly under fire, and at times contesting the ground with the most determined bravery. At the North

Anna, the regiment was but lightly engaged; but at Cold Harbor, where the enemy was again found athwart the way of march, the fighting was most bloody and heroic. The enemy held advantageous ground, which was well fortified, and against this the Union forces were led, in repeated but vain assaults. Lieutenant Colonel William H. Moody, while leading in the action of the 2d of June, was instantly killed, and Captain William W. Dyer, and Lieutenant Robert N. Culmer, were mortally wounded. The losses in both men and officers were very severe.

On the 15th, the corps crossed the James, and marching up, immediately commenced operations in front of Petersburg. On the 18th, a grand assault was delivered, but the enemy's works proved too strong to be carried. On the 29th, the regiment joined in a movement upon the Weldon Railroad, which resulted in the destruction of a portion of the road, and in the relief of the cavalry which had been cut off while upon a raid on the enemy's communications in rear of Richmond.

On the 9th of July the Sixth Corps, which, since the fall of Sedgwick at Spottsylvania, had been commanded by Wright, was ordered to Washington, to meet the enemy under Early, advancing triumphantly through Maryland. Early was easily repulsed, and sent flying through Virginia to the Shenandoah Valley. No decisive action was had, though the corps was kept almost constantly on the move, until Sheridan took command of the Union forces. He soon inspired all with new life and energy, and in the hard fought battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek, gained signal victories, capturing large numbers of guns, standards, and small arms, taking many prisoners, and completely annihilating the rebel power in the Valley. In this triumphant campaign, brilliant in victories beyond any other during the war, the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth bore an honorable part, attesting its bravery by severe losses on every field. In the action at Cedar Creek, Lieutenant James P. M'Kean was killed, and Captain Daniel Crum mortally wounded.

There being nothing more for it to do in the Valley, the Sixth Corps returned on the 1st of December to its place in the lines before Petersburg, where, during the winter, it remained in comparative quiet. On the 25th of March, 1865, the enemy attempted to force the Union lines at Fort Steadman. A counter move was immediately ordered along the whole front, to discover if the enemy had materially weakened any part. The brigade was ordered to go forward on the Sixth Corps' front. The enemy's outer works were gallantly carried; but on approaching his strong fortifications, they were found amply manned, and the brigade subsequently retired, the purpose of the advance having been fully accomplished. In this encounter, Lieutenant Michael Mullen was killed.

While the army was lying in front of Petersburg, Lieutenant General Grant had received from patriotic citizens the sum of four hundred and sixty dollars, to be presented to that soldier who should be the first to plant the Union flag on the ramparts of Richmond, upon its down-fall. As Richmond was not taken by assault, but fell without resistance, as a consequence of the successful assault on Petersburg, on the 2d of April, General Grant deemed that the donors' wishes would be best met by dividing the sum among the three Color Sergeants most conspicuous for gallantry in the three corps of the army most warmly engaged in the final struggle. He, accordingly, called on the corps commanders, to designate the men who should be the recipients of this coveted honor. General Wright, who commanded the Sixth Corps, reported the name of Sergeant David W. Young, of company E, of the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania Regiment, as most deserving in his corps. The one-third part of the above named sum, together with an autograph letter, of which the following is a copy, was, accordingly, transmitted to Sergeant Young:

WASHINGTON, July 22, 1865.

Sergeant DAVID W. YOUNG,

Company E, 139th Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers:

The sum of four hundred and sixty dollars was sent to me by patriotic citizens to be presented as a reward for gallantry to the soldier who should first raise our flag over Richmond. As Richmond was not taken by assault, I have concluded that the donors' wishes will be best carried out by dividing the sum between three soldiers most conspicuous for gallantry in the final and successful assault on Petersburg.

You have been selected by Major General H. G. Wright, commanding the Sixth Army Corps, as entitled to this honor on behalf of that command, and I herewith present to you one hundred and fifty-three dollars and thirty-three cents as one-third of the original sum.

It affords me great satisfaction to receive from your Commanding General such unqualified testimony of your gallantry and heroism in battle, and to be the medium of transmitting to you this recognition of the worth of your services in defense of our common country.

U. S. GRANT,

Lieutenant General.

The action on the part of the brigade was spirited and was attended with considerable loss. After the abandonment of Petersburg and retreat of the enemy, the corps pushed on to the support of Sheridan, who was straining every nerve to intercept the rebel army and prevent its escape. At Sailor's Creek it came up with the cavalry and stern fighting ensued; but the enemy was finally obliged to yield, and Ewell with large numbers of his corps was captured. A few days later the entire rebel army surrendered. Subsequently the regiment moved with other troops to the North Carolina border to the support of Sherman. But Johnston soon after surrendering, hostilities ceased, and the regiment returned by way of Richmond to the neighborhood of Washington, where, on the 21st of June, it was mustered out of service.
